RECIPROCITY.

- I would not kiss the sweetest lip Unless it kissed me too: As well go from the rosebud sip The morning's clear cold dew;
- Nor clasp a hand, though soft and warm Unless it pressed my own; I'd rather love the perfect form Carved out of Parian stone.
- I will not worship eyes the' bright And beautiful may be, Unless they bend their loving light On me-and only me;
- I would not love a form that heaven Itself had stamped divine, If I but dreamed that love was given To other hearts than mine.

How to Make Cood Coffee.

I have traveled some. And it is seldom that I find coffee fit to drink, especially at the hotels. It comes to us pretty near cold, often full of coffee grounds of a dirty black color; very often it is not deserving the name of coffee. All the cream and sugar you can putin it does not make it palatable. It is no more trouble to make good cofiee than poor. First wash the coffee clean, then dry it, tien brown it-not bu nit. The hopper-ful of our common coffee-mills is about enough for eight or ten persons, according to the strength the persons' want.
