

THE COAL FIELDS.

EDITOR INDEPENDENT: From notes of a visit to the coal beds of the Nehalem, I furnish you the following items. So far as prospected, the coal lies in Columbia county, in the territory between Peble creek and Elk creek, in township 4 north, range 4 west. In this scope twenty-six claims have been located, containing each from 40 to 160 acres.

The country is very broken and rough, being a succession of deep ravines and steep ridges, mostly burned over, covered with fallen timber and tangled under-brush. It can be reached best by way of Archbold's mill and the old stage road, which is open for wagons within two miles of Peble creek, and can easily be cleared of logs the remainder of the way.

An easy route for a railroad can be had up a branch of the west fork of Dairy creek and through a low pass to Peble; on this line there is very little elevation in the way of railroading.

No systematic prospecting has yet been done, and nothing more than croppings have been tested; but enough is known to justify the conclusion that an immense ledge underlies that entire tract. The croppings show in the gulches from a trace to five feet in thickness, bituminous coal of a good quality, pitching slightly to the north and east.

Some idea of the importance of this find can be had by figuring on a three-foot ledge, which will be found to contain over three million tons to the square mile. There can be little doubt that the ledge is over three feet thick, and that in a short time we shall see a railroad tapping the mine and thousands of miners enriching themselves and the country.

T. B. HANDLEY.

The Boston wool market denotes the decline in the price of wool and the falling off in the demand, on account of the Mills bill in congress to make wool duty free. Prices have fallen two and three cents on the pound, and while the purchasers hesitate to buy while the market is menaced by free trade possibilities, if the wool industry of the North and West must go, let the cotton and sugar of the South go with it. Let us surrender the industries of the United States to England. Fact is, we feel rather mean any way for having captured from England our broad territory and built up in it the grandest and most prosperous nation on earth. Free trade offers an excellent opportunity for us to return the country to its mother gradually and in such a way as not to startle the old lady by an abrupt gift, and at the same time our generous sons will never suspect our treacherous motives until the wheels of commerce have refused to turn. The plan is a grand one, and ought to succeed in retiring the statesmen who advocate it.

Should republicans make Judge Gresham their presidential candidate this year one of the few romantic stories which have found their way into American politics would doubtless play a prominent part in the campaign. This story is to the effect that during the war of the rebellion Gresham, then a young colonel under thirty, being stationed with his regiment at a post where there was no chance for any fighting, heard the guns of one of the battles before Vicksburg, and without orders marched his men into the thick of it. For this breach of discipline young Hotspur was deprived of his sword and put under arrest by his superior officer. General Grant, however, on hearing the circumstances, placed him once more at the head of his regiment, gave him plenty of fighting to do, and soon made him a brigadier general. It is easy to imagine what enthusiasm this story would awaken if told in a nominating speech at a national convention.—E.V.

Almost every resident of a doubtful state is a politician. The inhabitant of New York, Indiana, or Connecticut feels that the fate of the republic rests on his shoulders, and also that he is equal to the emergency. A resident of Indiana in speaking recently of the affairs of his state, said: "Every presidential year results in a loss of thousands of dollars to Indiana. During any important political campaign we neglect our business, throw away trade, raise meager and half-filled crops, quarrel with our neighbors and injure our health, merely because we get excited and try to save the nation in every township and voting precinct. A safe republican or democratic majority of 50,000 votes would be a glorious thing for Indiana. We need a substantial majority of that sort more than we need additional schools and churches.—American.

The prospects for splendid crops in Washington county were never better than at present. A big crop would help our farmers to easy circumstances.

DEEDS. McMillan to Mary Hillsboro, Saturday, April 21, 1888. Walter H, eldest child of Henry McMillan, aged 2 years and 8 months.

OBITUARY. CAREY.—Near Cornelius, March 20, 1888. Mrs. Sofia M. Carey, aged 75 years. The deceased was born in New York in the year 1813. In her childhood she emigrated with her parents to Ohio, where she was married to Abijah Carey in 1839. With her husband she removed to Oregon in 1846, and became one of the early pioneers of this coast. She has since lived in Cornelius and in Eastern Oregon, and in recent years with her daughter, five miles south of Cornelius.

She was converted to God in early youth, and since that time has been a faithful Christian and a consistent member of the Methodist church. Mrs. Carey died after a short illness, and was buried from the Methodist church of Cornelius, her body being followed to its last resting place by a large number of the old residents of Oregon who had spent so many years with her as she.
