Stoaw. - The he wiest storm we have had Morday the weather was cold and the sky was overcast with marky clouds. About dark of that day fine particles of now began falling, and comine ed until about half parties o'clock of Sue day morning. At that boar the snow lay on the ground to the death of one inch. Rain sacceeded snow and the drapping continued until some time Tues lay night. By noon of Tuesday he snow was gone and the ground was fooded with water. The rain gange indicated that during the thirty-x hoar's storm two inches of water fell. The ment remarkable feature of this storm was its coming fron the North. Commonly our rain is from the South.

THEATRICAL .- An individual, calling himself "Nick of the Woods," made his appearance at Dallas, on Tuesday the 15th, and advertised to play "Under the Gaslight, Mrs. Jinks, What suits this Nig," and other artistic pieces. Owing to the inclemency of the weather the audience was slim, and the result was the play was cut short. After some delay, he appeared accompanied by a little boy about four years old, and introduced him as young Roscius, the infant dancer and world beater. After a few pecliminary flourishes the signal was given for the infant to proceed, which he did with a vengeance, leaping up and down, first on one foot, then on the other, evidently under careful faining now limping like a lame turkey, then sticking out his tongue and grinring hugely. After a few more spasmodic jamps he retired amid the jeers and boots of the sold congregation. The next piece on the bills was a song called Mrs. J. iks, as already announced, by the proprietor. After waiting sufficient time for him to make any changes that the occasion required, the crowd became bois crous; bring him out! up with the sheets! music! were some of the eries that saluted him Order having been partially restored by the vigorous efforts of Mr. Hartman, the agent he again scaped out from under the sheets like a stretched arms, eyeballs glaring wildly and al-Box safer sa the hast Saboath in together a doubtful look.
