How to Transplant Trees.

Nature indicates that most trees shrubs, and plants will flourish most satisfactorily, endure longer, and be every way better when they send a strong tap root deep into the ground. And this fact is more particularly true when the subsoil is porous, that a long ·tap root will readily strike downward, as far as the stem grows upward. Were it not a habit of the tree or plant to send down such a tap root, it would be advisable to cut it off. But many nurserymen will persist in cutting this root off at all hazards; because they say that ten roots will push out at the end of the stump where the tap root was severed, which will be more serviceable to the growing plant or tree, in jail. than only one tap root.

Those ten roots, it is true, will be more advantageous in sustaining the life of a tree, for two or three years, long enough for sellers to get trees off their hands, and get their money for them, even by warranting every tree to live one year. Most men think if they can make a tree live one year, the difficu t: is all over; they may now count on a sa isfactory and successful growth. But there never was principle more erroneous. Every tree needs the advantage of a long tap root, to go down deep into the dry earth, and bring up moisture in dry weather, when the surface roots can not furnish one drop of water to the growing plant. Therefore, when a tree, or bush, or vine is transplanted, make a deep and large hole with a long crowbar, four feet deep, put the tap root into it, and fill the vacancy with sand. If there is no tap root, bend down a lateral root into the hole, and encourage a tap root to strike deep anto the soil. We are seeing the suthe failure of trees and vines, of all is about its stopping sometimes. kinds, cutting off the tap root.

Shrewd nurserymen have hoodwinked and bamboozled farmers long enough, by making them believe that the tap root should be cut off. Nature is a more reliable guide than the instructions of a nurseryman, who can sell more trees and make more money by recommending a practice that is diametrically opposed to Nature's law.
