This question is brought to our minds by reading an article from a Salem correspondent, published in the last issue of the New North- West, in which the writer of an excellent article uses the following expression: "Woman is powerless so long as she eats the bread of dependence, to prevent the aggression of man." The first proposition brought out in consideration of this point is-Is woman any more dependent upon mar, than men are mutually dependent upon each other? the assistance of each other, and are mutually dependent. She inspires man with high tury, we cannot but admit that to the and noble aspirations, and we see him under her guidance, putting forth herculean efforts for the accomplishment of great and noble ends. The influence for good which can be exerted by a noble, high-minded woman can hardly be estimated; and while we are sorry to say that in many instances her following particulars of the payment of would enable the Department to pay its power is exerted for evil, as would naturally follow, we do think that a careful consideration of the relative relations of the two sexes would convince the most skeptical that, as for power, the women hold the balance.
