Wemens Spear; or Whisperings of Na-

TO BETSEY BOBBET.

Last night as I meandered out To meditate spart, Secluded in my parasol-Deep subjects shock my beart. The earth, the skies, the prating brooks, All thundered in my car, "'Tis matrimony! 'tis matrimony That is a wemen's spear."

Day, with a red shirred bonnet on, Had down for China started : Its yellow ribbings fluttered o'er Her head as she departed. She seemed to wink her eye at me As she did disappear, And say, "Tis matrimony, Betsey, That is a wemen's spear."

I saw two levely roses Like wedded pardners grow; Sharp thorns did pave their mortal path, Yet sweetly did they blow. They seemed to blow these glorious words Into my willing ear. " B. Bobbet, it is matrimony,

Two gentle sheep upon the hills, How sweet the twain did run, As I meandered gently on, And sot down on a stun. They seemed to murmer sheepishly, "Oh! Betsey Bobbet dear, 'Tis matrimony, 'tis matrimony,

That is a wemen's spear."

That is a wemen's spear.

A rustic had broke down his team, I mused almost in tears, How can a yoke be borne along By half a pair of steers? Even thus in wrath did Nature speak, 'Hear! Betsey Bobbet! hear! 'Tis matrimony ! tis matrimony !

That is a wemen's spear !" Sweet was the honeysuckle's breath Upon the ambient nir, Sweet was the tender coos of doves, Yet sweeter husbands are. All nature's voices poured these words Into my willing ear, " B. Bobbet, it is matrimony, That is a wemen's spear."
