How He Will Feel.

Some are of the opinion that Greeley will carry the State of Oregon. In the event he does, we can imagine that the elector who carries the result to College, will feel about as mean as did a certain man who went on the same mission a few years ago.

Meeting this elector after his return, a friend accosted him:—"Hello, old boy! How do you feel?" To which he replied, "Well, I feel very much relieved now; but, I tell you, I never in my life felt so small and mean, as when I crossed the hall and deposited a Democratic vote for Oregon."

That man couldn't be hired to go again, and that is the way the Greeley elector would feel.

CHAND.—The Farmer has been purchased by Messrs Clarke & Craig. They promise to make a first-class agricultural journal of it, and it surely ought to be liberally patronized by those whose interests they advocate.

Some particular idea may not meet the approval of one farmer, and yet be just the thing his neighbor desires; and so it goes. A paper conducted in the interest of agriculture, cannot fail to be replete with ideas and suggestions suited to every class of farming. The subscription price is only $2 50 per year, in advance, which brings it within the reach of every farmer, and should be found in every farm house in Oregon.

FLOUR FAMINE.—The Olympia Tribune of the 25th says: "Of flour there is none in the market. The stores are without a single sack, and the Tumwater mills have neither grain nor flour. All were relying on the arrival of the steamer from Portland for supplies of grain and flour. As the steamer has failed to come, as expected, the market is bare and prices are up. This morning, unable to get more, we purchased a ten-pound sack of graham flour, for which we had to pay seventy-five cents. As it would take twenty of these little sacks to make one barrel, at that rate, the flour is bringing $15 per barrel. In Portland the same article is selling for $5 50. It isn't advisable, we think, at the present prices, to lay in more than a ten-pound stock. Possibly, in another week, the steamer may be in, and the stores and warehouses filled again with bread-stuff."
