

VICTORIA C. WOODHULL.

We print below an extract from the speech of Mrs. Woodhull which was to have been delivered in Cooper Inst. New York, January 9, 1873. We should like to reprint the whole speech, but our limited space will not permit. Among the many things said in the speech, to which we refer, is found the following.

MY FRIENDS AND FELLOW CITIZENS: I come into your presence from a cell in the American Bastille, to which I was consigned by the cowardly servility of the age. I am still held under heavy bonds to return to that cell, or to meet my trial in a United States Court, upon a scandalous charge trumped up by the ignorant or the corrupt officers of the law, conspiring with others to deprive me, under the falsest and shallowest of pretexts, of my inherited privileges as an American citizen. In my person, the freedom of the press is assailed, and stricken down, and such has been the adverse concurrence of circumstances that the press itself has tacitly consented, almost with unanimity, to this sacrilegious invasion of one of the most sacred of civil rights. Public opinion too has been abused into concurring for a moment with this outrage.

My sister and myself are now indicted in the United States Court on the preposterous charge of sending obscene literature through the United States mail—a charge which the officers of the Government will never dare to bring to a trial, as they cannot afford themselves to be brought into complete ridicule. If anything which I can say in this address, or which I can say or write at any time, can provoke or sting them into a folly and madness of exposing the weakness and the damnable outrage of this unallowable proceeding against peaceable and law-abiding citizens, by bringing the case to trial I shall consider that success the most fortunate event of my life. But I now predict before you, and make my formal record of that prediction for future reference and use that I shall fail, utterly fail in the attempt. The District Attorney, and everybody concerned in this nefarious matter have either already accomplished all they aimed at, by covering my sister and me with the odium of being prisoners and accused of a scandalous offense, or they have had enough of the woe matter seeing that it was a plunder from the start, and wish themselves fairly rid of it.

I repeat my prediction, and make it as marked and distinct as possible: the United States Government will never proceed to trial, in the case now on their court docket in the Southern District of New York, against Victoria C Woodhull and Tennie C Claflin, for violating the Statute of Congress against transmitting obscene literature through the mails. They will never dare to do it. On the other hand, I predict that the Government will not enter non prosequi, and make thereby the only honorable reparation, to some slight extent, which it would be in their power to make, for the outrage they have committed on our individual rights. And my friends, you must not forget that, when an individual is wronged, by the superection of law officers, the public is thereby outraged. I predict, however, that the course they will pursue will be to hold the case over our heads, as a threat, to delay, and postpone it from time to time, to pretend that they intend to bring us to trial, and yet never to do so in fact; in the hope that fortune will favor them in getting them out of the scrape, through our death or poverty, or virtual surrender to the force of a long continued persecution.

But they reckon without their host. The cards of fate are shuffled for a different deal. I give notice here and now, I hope the occasion is sufficiently public one, that the publication office of WOODHULL & CLAFLIN'S WEEKLY is at Broad street, New York city, and that from that office there will soon be issued and sold to all applicants a revised edition of the suppressed number of WOODHULL & CLAFLIN'S WEEKLY, containing the "Becher-Tilton scandal," and that within a few weeks there will probably have been sent a million copies of it to every part of the world, so that the whole public shall be my jury and decide whether there is anything obscene in that earnest and all-important statement,

THE EDUCATION FOR THE TIMES

The Importance of a Practical Education Was never more Apparent than Now!

IT IS UNIVERSALLY ACKNOWLEDGED that as we grow in our perity we grow more practical, and that it is required of men that they educate themselves practically—educate themselves in the best manner possible—to meet the demands of the times.

When Agesilaus, King of Sparta, was asked what things he thought most proper for boys to learn, he replied: "Those things which teach them to do as they ought to do."

"Believe all things in number and weight, and put all in writing that thou givest out of respect in," is a precept of universal application; and there is a special necessity for its strict observance in all business transactions. You must be able to write, and to read, and to calculate. Are YOU prepared to meet its demands?

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,
FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.

The reputation this excellent medicine enjoys, is derived from its cures, many of which are truly marvellous. In various cases of Scrofulous disease, where the system seemed saturated with corruption, have been purified and cured by it. Scrofulous affections and disorders, which were aggravated by the scrofulous contamination until they were painfully afflicting, have been radically cured in such great numbers in almost every section of the country, that the public scarcely need to be informed of its virtues or uses.

Scrofulous poison is one of the most destructive enemies of our race. Often, this unseen and unfit tenant of the organism undermines the constitution, and invites the attack of enfeebling or fatal diseases, without exciting a suspicion of its presence. Again, it seems to breed infection throughout the body, and then, on some favorable occasion, rapidly develop into one or other of its hideous forms, either on the surface or among the vitals. In the latter, tubercles may be suddenly deposited in the lungs or heart, or tumors formed in the liver, or it shows its presence by eruptions on the skin, or foul ulcers, and invites the attack of enfeebling or fatal diseases, without exciting a suspicion of its presence.
