

THOUGHTS. We sometimes think—and so do you!— That life has little that is true; Not much of friendship or of love, That speaks the life of realms above. And yet we closely hug the wreck, As wedded arm the wedded neck, Which proves how'er the mind may rue, The heart know much of life is true. We sometimes dream—and so do you!— What lies beyond those depths of blue? And dreaming thus, we feel that life Must be devoid of every strife! Yet, dreaming on, we hesitate To lift our hand and open the gate, We lack in faith, or are too wise To trade for dreams o'en life that dies. At times we'd swear—no doubt do you! That giddy fortune favors few, We look on riches, power and fame, And say, how brightly life can flame! While deeming them a kindly blaze, Where joy can warm itself with praise; And yet the highest of the high By bitterest grief are called to die. And thus we learn—and so must you!— Each life has all that is life's due; Exact proportion to the sweets, The bitter is that each one meets; And so the night divides the day— Some light, some darkness for our clay; And though the day seems gladdened far, 'Tis night that leaves the Gate ajar.

SAVAGES AND SETTLERS. Four of the Modoc savages who were concerned in the murder of General Canby and Peace Commissioner Thomas have been hanged, by authority of the Federal Government. But by the orders of the same Government, the dozen or more savages who massacred the peaceful and inoffensive settlers on Lost River, last November—American citizens, every one of them,—are not only not punished at all for their atrocious crimes, but are actually protected from just punishment at the hands of the civil authorities, and armed escort is furnished to convey them to comfortable homes provided for their abode in Wyoming Territory. The English [or American, we ought to call it] of this is: Indians shall be rewarded for massacring settlers; but if they murder an officer of the Federal Government they shall be hung. Settlers have no rights which the savages need to respect, and the Government will sustain the savages in any excesses or atrocities perpetrated upon settlers. God help the settlers,—the Government stands by the savages. It settles expect the Government to protect them they must become savages. This Modoc business, planned out, is virtually offering savages premiums to murder peaceful civilians. Pity the Quaker peace crowd couldn't be obliged themselves to try life and hazard death on the frontier, as the brave and unprotected settlers do. The scalping and massacring of a few of their number might work a most wholesome change of sentiment among the survivors, as regards the red-handed "Children of the Forest," the wolfish pets of the Government.—Bulletin.

A GENERAL ASSASSINATED—A base murder was committed on the 11th of September, at Yankton Dakota, the victim being Brig. Gen. E. S. McCook, Secretary of the Territory. He was shot at a railroad meeting by a man named Wintermute in a dispute about some bonds. Gen. McCook was the fifth son of Gen. Daniel McCook of Ohio, who was killed at the head of John Morgan's pursuers at the action at Buffington Island, and was one of eight brothers who served with distinction in the late war, three of whom were killed in battle.

LAKE DISASTER.—The propeller Iconides, connecting with the Detroit and Milwaukee Railway, and one of the largest steamers on the lakes, foundered and sunk seven miles off Grand Haven last Monday. Her signal of distress was hoisted at 9 A. M., but so terrible was the sea and heavy the wind no assistance could reach her. The passengers took to the boats, but one capsized, and fourteen persons were drowned.

A singular natural curiosity is mentioned at Sadawga pond, in Whitinham, Vermont, consisting of 150 acres of land float on the surface of the water, covered with cranberries, and even sustaining trees 15 feet high. When the water is raised or lowered at the dam in the pond, the island rises and falls with it, and fish are caught by boring a hole in the crust, and fishing down through, as through ice in winter.
