A few minutes later the Lockport Under, the daughter of an East Lockport man who had fought considerably well in the small gray pony war, was not yet a "female college," and usually spent her evenings in the company of her mother, listening to the latest news of the world. However, she had at least one exception to her rule. When she was out of the house, she would sit in a chair and listen to the radio, as she had always done before. She was pleased to find that she could still understand the music, and enjoyed it very much.

However, after the music had ended, she was left to herself again. She was glad to have the peace and quiet, and to be able to think about the things that she had learned during the day. She was also glad to be able to enjoy the music, and to be able to listen to it without being disturbed by anyone else.

The music was a welcome break from the noise and confusion of the world. It was a time to relax and to think about the things that were important to her. It was a time to be able to enjoy the beauty of the music, and to be able to appreciate the beauty of the world around her.

She was grateful for the music, and for the peace that it brought. She was grateful for the opportunity to listen to it, and to be able to think about the things that were important to her. She was grateful for the opportunity to be able to be alone, and to be able to enjoy the music, and to be able to think about the things that were important to her.
