Watson Brown's Hody.

The Luck of a Broken Corset.

Dr. Jarvis T. Johnson of Martinsville, Ind., gives the following account of how he come into possession of the body of one of John Brown's sons:

the war of 1861, and served in that ca- them, at the end of which time they In the spring of 1862, General Bank's division moved up the valley of the part of the said division. After we had entered the city I took possession of the medical college situated therein. In the menseum of said college I found a large, symetrical and anatomical human body or frame. It had been well prepared for preservation, and contained all the muscles, arteries and nerves. By permission of General Banks, I took charge of the specimen and removed it to the Sun. Academy hospital in Winchester, which hespital was under my control. After its removal to the said hospital, a number of the prominent citizens of Winchester called upon me at the hospital, and each and all declared that it was the remains of a son of John Brown; that | that our annual Catalogue and price list for the said son had been killed at Harper's 1882 83 is now ready for distribution. He told me that after young Brown was killed at Harper's Ferry, he had the body sent to Winchester, and then, upon con- lost in conjectures as to what kind of a sultation with the other professors of the college, it was decided to prepare the body of young Brown that it might be preserved in the museum of the college, as a specimen and an object of interest and note. The professor strongly appealed to me, in the name of my profession and in the interest of the same, and as a friend of science, to return to him the said body. He said that when the war was over the college, which had been burned, would be rebuilt, and that it should be deposited therein. He cited the fact that the sons of John Brown had been killed while engaged with their
