Where the Singing Canaries Hall From.

"Almost all the singing canaries in the world come from the Hartz mountains, in central Germany," continued their singing qualities, and are not born with them, and as for various reasons it would hardly pay in America to raise and drill canaries the way they do it and drill canaries the way they do it and drill canaries the way they do it to ask for one in return. "As canaries acquire their singing qualities, and are not born and drill canaries the way they do it over there, it is quite natural that this peculiar industry is confined to a mountainous portion of Germany, where the soil is barren and where for more than a century generation after generation has used this as a means to increase their income, rather than to depend on it solely. American-bred birds, for want of proper training and tuition, are hardly ever good singers. The best breed of canaries come from St. Andreasberg, a village in the Hartz. A practiced ear can immediately detect a bird of that breed from among the others. We haven't got this season's lot yet, young birds over there until they are able to sing perfectly, which happens every year about this time. These St. Andreasberg canaries are higher in price than any, but they are worth the difference. They have such sweet, low, tender, pretty snatches of song in their littlet hrosts as no other birds. Who, do gurgling notes, such liquid trolls and you say? Why, because there in St. Andreasberg they have methods of their own and are in possession of some little secrets in canary culture that other places do not possess. As a conse-

in teaching the canaries to sing. They have what is known as the regular 'bird organ'—a small box shaped like an ordinary organ and turned by a 'bird organ'—a small box shaped like an ordinary organ and turned by a crank mechanically. On this tunes are played right early in the morning, and sobbed like children. When they then again just before dusk in the evening, and during this school time no other birds are allowed to be within hearing of them. By and by the birds pick up single notes and then snatches of song and mold them in their own little heads into something new and canary-like. Some more tricks and lessons are made use of, and some of the Hartz fanciers and breeders are better at this than others, and their birds bring better prices." Artemus Ward's Programme.

We have before us a relic of Artemus Ward. It is one of the programmes of his "Among the Mormons" entertainment, dated Sandusky, May 8 (probably 1864).
