Democratic papers seem satisfied with our retention of one Samoan island for a coaling station, though they do not explain how we can assimilate 4000 Polynesians without a fracture of the Declaration of Independence. The fewness of the Samoans on our solitary island is no bar to the Democratic arguments expounding the consent of the governed, a subject on which they assume to be much wiser than Jefferson was in the Louisiana purchase. There is an awkward democratic record in regard to Samos. The only democrat who has been president in half a century tried to pull down the flag in Samoa and did pull it down in Hawaii. The president who committed that error is in retirement, thoroughly so, and his party, still fighting American destiny, never stood lower in public confidence than at this time. WHAT IS TAUGHT.

Students At The O. A. C. Taught More Than Farming

To the average visitor few places could be visited with greater interest than our agricultural college, and among its many departments and courses none are more interesting or complete than the mechanical. While we call it an agricultural college, and while the experiments performed by the state experiment station for the state in general, are along the lines of agriculture, yet the mechanical department is more largely patronized by the students, and more complete than any other of the departments, though this latter statement may not seem true because of the many excellent features that have of late been added to the

The freshman on entering his career as a mechanical student is introduced to the woodworking room on the upper floor of Mechanical Hall. Under the direction of Prof. Pritchard he is taught the difference between a jack-plane and an auger, and how to navigate a saw, or handle a hammer.

He is taught how to make a perfect "joint" without the use of a "dutchman,', how to "mertise," how to "dovetail," and how to do the many inumerable things that a carpenter must do in order to follow the duties of his profession. Here also the freshman has the use of and learns to operate the woodlathes, rip, buzz, jig and band-saws, and all kinds of machinery used in woodshops of the highest order. The next year the student prides himself in being a sophomore and finds his mechanical duties at the power-house where under Prof. Phillips he learns the entire profession, except shoeing horses, if this may be called a part of the profession. Here he is taught to make a "lap" and a "butt" weld, how to get the right "temper" and how not to get out of temper, he is taught how to take the city of Corvallis, Monday of this week. crudest piece of iron and transform it into anything from a cork-screw to a sledge-hammer.
