WHAT THE RECORDS SHOW.

The house of representatives having resolved itself into a committee of the whole, and having under consideration appropriation bills, we quote from the congressional record, page 2,458, Feb. 25, 1898, showing the tireless efforts Mr. Tongue put forth in forwarding the interests of Yaquina Bay. So energetic and deeply interested was he in this project that when his time for speaking had expired, he repeatedly requested and was granted more time in which to support it. Mr. Tongue—Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The clerk read as follows: "Insert in line 16, page 77, after the word 'dollars' the following: 'For improvement of Yaquina Bay and Harbor; continuing improvement, $150,000.'"

Mr. Tongue—Mr. Chairman it will be seen that at the time when the chief of engineers was examined before the committee on appropriations, the Secretary of War had taken no action under this provision of the law of 1896. Since that time he has acted under its provision, has directed specifications to be prepared, and has directed that advertisements be made for bids for this contract. * * * Since the river and harbor act of 1896 was passed the work upon these jetties has been practically suspended. The government has a full plant. * * * Undoubtedly this contract will be let within the next 90 days.

The Chairman—"The time of the gentleman has expired." Mr. Tongue—"I should like to have a few more minutes time."

There was no objection. Mr. Hepburn—"What part is effected by this amendment?"

Mr. Tongue—"It is Yaquina Bay. Permit me to explain in answer to the question just asked by the gentleman from Iowa. Yaquina Bay is not a large town; it is not a work sought for by great commercial gentlemen; it is not being sought for by men of wealth; but let me say, Mr. Chairman, there will be no expenditure of this amount of money anywhere in the United States which will benefit so many people who are working on farms as the expenditure contemplated by this amendment. Yaquina Bay is situated on the western coast of Oregon. There is a railroad extending out 140 miles from Yaquina Bay, across three lines of railroad and one river that traverses the whole of the Willamette Valley. * * * Deepen this harbor, and all the products of western and largely of eastern Oregon and the whole Willamette Valley will have a better opportunity to get to market. They will get to a market for 7 or 8 cents per hundred pounds cheaper than they do now. The completion of this improvement, and I speak advisedly, because I have studied carefully the question, means an increase of 5 cents a bushel for every bushel of wheat raised in western Oregon and largely in eastern Oregon. It means the same increase upon every bushel of potatoes, every ton of hay, every hundred pounds of hops, every box of fruit, and every class of production raised in that section of the country."

The Chairman—"The gentleman's time has expired." Mr. Hepburn—"I ask that the gentleman from Oregon may have five minutes more, for I want to ask him another question."

There was no objection.

Mr. Hepburn—"How far is Yaquina Bay from the mouth of the Columbia River?"

Mr. Tongue—"I cannot state the distance, but judge somewhere near 150 or 200 miles."

Mr. Hepburn—"How far distant from the Columbia River does the road penetrate?"

Mr. Tongue—"About 120 miles. This road, as it now runs * * * extends into a region that contains some of the finest timber in the United States. If the improvement is completed, that road will be extended into eastern Oregon and eastward into Montana * * * As at present situated, the road is valueless, and every farmer in Oregon is suffering by it. I want to say that there is no question before congress in which the people of Oregon are so interested and upon which there is so much anxiety manifested as there is to get rid of the doubt that has been held over the continuation of this improvement. The Secretary of War has decided to go on with the work, and I would like to see this congress support it."

Mr. Dickery—"I would like the attention of the committee for a few minutes. In my judgment the committee ought to reject the proposed amendment. In my opinion this project is unworthy the expenditure of public money. There was expended on this bay up to and including the appropriation of August 17, 1894, the sum of $676,093.34. The expenditure of that money deepened the channel of entrance to the bay from 7 and 8 feet, as it was when the work began, to 12 and 15 when the work was completed. (Mr. Dockery then continues with lengthy details showing how the freight and passenger traffic over the Yaquina harbor decreased during the work of improvement.) Mr. Tongue—"Mr. Chairman, one word in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. Dockery). I do not contend that under the present circumstances there is much valuable commerce going through Yaquina Bay. But I wish to state briefly some of the reasons for the existing condition of affairs. Some years ago, as I said in my opening remarks, a railroad was constructed to Yaquina Bay. It was expected that boats would be placed upon that bay and operated between there and San Francisco. As soon as that railroad was in operation and as soon as the boats began to run wheat went up in a single day 7 cents a bushel at Corvallis, the heart of the Willamette Valley. At the place of my residence, within 20 miles of Portland, 150 miles from Yaquina Bay, there was a rise in price of 4 cents a bushel. We believed at the time that the farming community of Oregon had received a boom which would be of immense value. If Yaquina Bay is improved, then instead of taking wheat 100 miles northward, and 100, 150 to 180 miles southward, the transportation can be accomplished by one haul of the railroad, which means, as I have said, a difference of 5 to 7 cents a bushel on wheat. It is true we are not a powerful state; it is true we have not many votes on the floor of this house, it is true we have not the same amount of commerce as our friends along the Missouri river. But I remind the gentleman that it is only a few years ago since what is now a great state was uninhabited except by the roaming bands of Indians. It was men and women from the banks of the Missouri and from other states who faced the hardships of a trip across the plains when there were no railroads or steamboats, when they had to cross the desert and defend their camps from the hostile Indians during the night. The chairman—"The time of the gentleman has expired." Mr. Tongue—"I should like to have five minutes more."

There was no objection.

Mr. Tongue—"In the morning they had sometimes to bury their dead in rude coffins. They crossed the mountains until they reached this territory that was in the hands of the Hudson Bay Company, and saved an empire to the people of the United States. They are the people who are asking this help.

"Why, Mr. Chairman, whatever money we make we bring to you. Our purchases are almost wholly from the East. The plows with which we cultivate our fields, the drills with which we plant our grain, the machines by which we harvest and thresh it, and the very wagons with which we haul it to market are purchased from you. The lumbermen in our woods fell their timber with axes and saws made in Eastern forges. Why, Mr. Chairman, our infants are swaddled in clothing made by you. Our beds are covered with blankets from your looms, and even our dead are buried in coffins made east of the Missouri river. Whatever money we make we spend with you. I hope the gentleman from Missouri will not begrudge the farmers of Oregon the assistance contemplated by this measure, and if he does, then I hope, if he is supported by that side of the house, that he and they will no longer claim to be the friends of the farmers instead of corporations. A vote against this amendment is a vote against the farmers of Oregon and in favor of one of the greatest corporations in this country."
