nificance. The dead of two wars are honored, and the real meaning of the day is brought home to the later generation as it never has been before. The haziness that time gives to memories of those who have gone to their last resting place is brushed aside and the real import of the day stands out with more distinctness. One day in the year may well be given over entirely to honoring our soldier dead. It is not too much. They gave up their lives some to hold the country undivided and some to relieve a down-trodden people at the threshold of our republic. We owe them a debt of gratitude that we never can repay, whether they fought in the civil war or the war with Spain. Their devotion and their courage entitle them to the grateful remembrance we show, and the recent additions to their number make the real significance of the exercises more distinct.

PEDDLERS OF THE OCEAN.

Santical Prototype of the Man with the Pack, The man with a pack on his back, rudging from village to village and offering for sale at cottage and farmhouse a miscellaneous collection of wares, has his counterpart in the ocean peddler, ranging in size from a schoonhousand tons burden.

The ocean peddler starts out from Hamburg or San Francisco, the chief home ports of the trade, with a definite object in view. Sailing from the former city, the course is generally laid either to the coast of Africa or South America, having in the hold a varied assortment of goods likely to be marketable in the regions visitedcotton fabrics, trinkets, arms, ammunition, liquors, and all spare room filled up with coal.

As the largest profits are often de rived from the sale of contraband goods, such as munitions of war to insurgent bodies, and as detection by regular authorities would lead to confiscation, several thousand rounds of cartridges are probably done up in innocent-looking cases stamped "Canned beef," and a few stands of discarded German army rifles in packages labeled "Glass, with care,"

The captain of such a vessel must possess not only ability as a navigator, but an expert knowledge of the requirements of his trade in addition to a plausible tongue wherewith to barter and win over the good will of an illdisposed official. If he does not own an interest in the ship it is generally required that he shall in her cargo.

Trudging along over the ocean at a seven or eight knot gait, saving his coal as much as possible, the peddler opens his trade by casting anchor in. say, a South or Central American port, when, having squared the commandante, he invites merchants and others on board to inspect his stock. Duty, of course, has to be paid by the purchaser, but in certain cases that difficulty is overcome by the visitor to the ship going ashore swollen out, perhaps, to three times his normal size by as many new suits of clothing.

The greatest good fortune that can fall in the way of an ocean peddler is for an American or British man-of-war to put in to some out-of-the-way port in which he is lying, short of coal. Then from his spare stock he sells a few hundred tons at as hard a bargain as the necessity of the purchaser permits him to drive. On the Central American coast the peddler usually times his visit at about the opening of the coffee season, that is, early in the new year, so that when load up, almost to the water line, with the principal export of the country. That the ocean-peddling trade is not without its dangers is illustrated by a story told by a mate of one of those vessels. In order to preserve his regoods are sometimes stored in places customs officer, and, in the case in question, the mate's bunk was chosen as the safest repository for certain packages of dynamite consigned to the went well until the night before the the lightning playing about the masts in an alarming manner. The mate confessed that the idea of turning in upon a bed of dynamite under such circumstances was not conducive to peaceful repose, even to one accustomed to sleep through all manner of danflash found its way to his bunk he would not be likely to be made aware

The ocean-peddling trade on the Pacific has been shorn of much of its profit since the inter-island passenger traffic in natives, who too often were carried as passengers much against their will, to dive for pearls on the great Australian bank, has been effectually suppressed. Still, a considerable trade is carried on in small articles in hardware, old clothes, personal Mike has several regular customers in trinkets and an occasional case of "dry goods," which if seized would turn out o be remarkably wet.—New York Sun.

Nothing Wasted.

Until one realizes how carefully the ousiness is conducted, it is a mystery now any profit is made by the 5-cent restaurants which are so great a boon to working men. In the first place, they feed a good many people, ranging all the way from three hundred to five nundred a day, and thus buy their provisions in bulk, oatmeal by the barrel, veal by the carcass, beans almost by the carload, and as to hash, they make that by the bushel. Moreover, they save expense by using the latest appliances, steam tables to keep the food warm, choppers to cut up the hash, and dish-washers that save wear and tear of muscle and towel. So economical is the business that they even strain the dish-washer, collecting the grease for the soap kettle. Their economy, however, does not lead them to the extreme of saving food from the plate and serving it again. Even the hash is brand-

Curiosity Saves Life.

Had a Sense of Humor. A sense of humor is a great thing in nelping a man over a hard place, and the Biddeford Record thinks one of that city's rumsellers must be possessed of the aid of this cheerfulness. It was just after the big seizure of liquors the other day that a man who didn't know of the raid stepped up to the dismantled bar and asked for a drink. The proprietor looked at the man for a second and then spreading his arms out on the bar, said, as pleasantly as he could under the circumstances: "I'm very sorry, but I have just let the last of my stock of beer go."
