

Our local Bryan organ seems to be one of a very few papers in the country that have learned nothing from the recent election. But then, that was to be expected.

The Times announces the fact that Standard Oil stock has advanced in value since November 6th, and declares that this is the result of election. The price of sugar has been reduced about 15 per cent since election.

Now that the intoxication of the campaign is beginning to wear away the Bryan press is coming to see the situation as the republicans viewed it two months ago. The Roseburg review makes this acknowledgement: "Anyway the democratic party has been used to good advantage by W. R. Hearst during the campaign to advertise his three big yellow journals."

When the voters of the United States chose William McKinley for president, they endorsed this plank in the republican platform: "We condemn all conspiracies and combinations intended to restrain business, to create monopolies, to limit production, or to control prices, and favor such legislation as will effectively restrain and prevent all such abuses, protect competition and secure the rights of producers, laborers and all who are engaged in industry and commerce," and the country may rest assured that so far as it is in the power of the best brains in the nation to devise effective legislation, and of the administration to enforce it, everything possible will be done to redeem this pledge.

"A majority of the American people have just voted for a defense and a perpetuation of the trust principle," says an irresponsible contemporary, which contained these words the morning after election: "The American people wanted to condemn trusts. McKinley's preference is unusual. It is mainly due to the refusal of the democrats east of the Mississippi to accept Bryan's views on finance. The day that Bryan forced specific mention of free coinage in the platform, he invited defeat. It was the Hollow Way of O'Hain that brought him his Waterloo." Now what does this jumping jack believe? Did the people vote for a defense and a perpetuation of the trust principle, or did their vote mean a condemnation of Bryanism?

What Others Have Done.

Dr. James Withycombe, vice-director of the OAO Experiment Station, who is now in the East, has written a very interesting letter to C. H. Markham, from which the following extract is taken. It will demonstrate to the farmers of the valley what can be done, and clearly shows that some of the Eastern states have experienced the exact conditions that are now confronting the farmers of the Willamette Valley. The following is gleaned: A visit to the dairying sections of these states cannot fail to impress one favorably, as the ear marks of prosperity are in evidence on every hand. To illustrate this point, perhaps statistics obtained in Jefferson county, Wis., will best serve my purpose. This county has a population of about 40,000 and there are about 40,000 cows kept in the county, yielding an annual revenue from skim-milk, butter and cheese of $2,000,000. Before the advent of dairying these grain growing was the principal agricultural industry. During this period the average crop of wheat dropped to about eight bushels per acre and 60 per cent of the farms were mortgaged. Since the introduction of dairying the average yield of wheat has been brought up to 22 bushels per acre and the farmers have $2,000,000 deposited to their credit in the banks of the county. The phenomenal growth of the industry in this county is largely due to the personal efforts of ex-Governor Hoard and to the influence of his splendid paper, Hoard's Dairyman.

After investigating the dairying industry here, my convictions are materially strengthened in the fact that the cow will ultimately become the corner-stone of agricultural prosperity in our state, probably more especially so in Western Oregon.

From here I go East to visit the principal experiment stations and the older dairying sections.

What Mr. Stone Said.

Edwin Stone, manager of the Corvallis & Eastern Railroad, who is in the city, says 40,000 acres of land have been thrown open for settlement west of Corvallis, toward the Coast Range slope. In the course of an interview, Mr. Stone mentioned the mining excitement around Detroit, in the Cascade Mountains, and the fact that surveyors were working westward from the summit of the Cascades toward the present terminus of the Corvallis & Eastern.

The land thrown upon the market west of Corvallis belonged to the Geo. S. Coe estate. It has been taken out of the courts and placed upon the market by Coast Land & Livestock Co., of which J. K. Weatherford is secretary. The land is mostly grazing and agricultural land, with a small scattering of timber.

When asked about the mining strike near Detroit, Mr. Stone said he did not want to be quoted as an authority, but would give the information for what it was worth. According to report, a ledge 100 feet wide has been uncovered, which could be traced a distance of nearly two miles. While in Albany some rock was sent him for the purpose of having it assayed in Portland. The letter accompanying the rock stated that the ore was taken from the ledge at a depth of three feet. It assayed $4.13. Nine cents of that was silver; all the balance gold. The new strike is 58 miles from Albany.

Mr. Stone would not say much about the surveying party further than that they had been in the interior of Central Oregon relocating the old survey line of the Oregon Pacific and that they were working west. During the last year his road, he said, had handled a large lumber and logging trade.—Telegram.

Timber Consumption.

In the report of Expert A. J. Johnson, who was commissioned to prepare the forestry exhibit for the Pan-American Exposition, has made a report relative to the timber resources of Oregon. Following is an interesting extract from his report, and relates entirely to the consumption of the timber of this state:

Roughly speaking, the total consumption of timber in the state for the present year will amount to 900,000,000 feet. Of this quantity the mills are credited with 500,000,000, and the remaining 400,000,000 covers that which will be used for fuel, fence posts, fence rails, railroad ties and such miscellanies.

It is interesting to note that the mills will consume 100,000,000 more feet this year than was consumed last year. This is proof that not only have many new mills been established, but that all the old mills, some of which have been closed, have been kept running full blast. Another interesting fact to note is that the fuel consumption almost equals that of the mills.

Last year the fuel consumption was the same and only former years larger. It is only within the last year that the mill supply exceeds that of the fuel supply. Lack of cheap coal causes 400,000,000 feet of fuel to be consumed for fuel every year. Nearly all the steamboats running on the rivers, many of the engines running out of the city, and the principal factories and industries in Oregon use wood for steam purposes. As soon as a cheap grade of coal is placed upon the market as is promised in the near future, this consumption will be cut down to a nominal figure.

Notable among the pleasures afforded by the Shasta Route is the winter trip to Southern California and Arizona. Renewed acquaintance with this section will ever develop fresh points of interest and added industries, in its prolific vegetation and among its numberless resorts of mountain, shore, valley and plain. The two daily Shasta trains from Portland to California have been recently equipped with the most approved pattern of standard and tourist sleeping cars, but the low rates of fare will still continue in effect. Illustrated guides to the winter resorts of California and Arizona may be had on application to C. H. MARKHAM, G. P. A., Portland, Oregon.
