The O A C students are planning to give a dance at the Armory in commemoration of Thanksgiving. However, as many of them desire to go home on this holiday, it has been decided to hold the dance on the night before Thanksgiving, Wednesday, November 28.

Married, November 14, 1900, in this city, at the home of the bride's parent, Mr. William W. Hubbard, of Lafayette, Or., to Miss Princess Belt, by Rev. M. Noble. The young lady is well known here and carries with her the best wishes of many friends for a long and happy wedded life.

Be sure to read the notice of Dr. Lowe, the well-known optician, in this issue. He is to return here next week. Dr. Lowe has been coming to Corvallis for several years and his work and glasses give universal satisfaction to all. So far as we know he is the only optician that ever returned the second time.

Word reached Corvallis a day or so ago to the effect that "Old Grover," remarkable dog of the Zahn boys, of Alsea, had treed two more cougars over there last Tuesday evening, and that Dick Zahn had shot them. This makes a record of 19 cougars this faithful day has assisted in killing. It will be hard to find a dog with a better record.

The Corvallis Coffee Club contains within itself a "Social Club." While it is composed of and managed by members of the Coffee Club it is distinctly a social affair and in no way interferes with the regular workings of the former organization. Invitations are out for the first function of the new club this evening at the Fireman's Hall.

Mayor J. W. Crawford, of this city, returned the first of the week from a business trip to Salem. He states that while down there he got into conversation with a gentleman from Dallas and the latter reported that there was in the neighborhood of fourteen carloads of dried prunes in that section that had not been sold yet. From what was learned it is understood that the prune owners were anticipating the re-election of McKinley and had confidence that after the campaign was closed prices would most likely rise. If such was their motive they seem in a fair way to make by it, as market quotations indicate a firmer price.

The presence of the state commander, J. W. Sherwood, at their meeting Wednesday night, was made the occasion for initiating a number of candidates for admission to the Maccabees, and a banquet in honor of the distinguished guest. About 25 members of the order from Albany were present and assisted in the ceremonies.

There was no meeting of the council Monday. Mayor Crawford and Councilmen Nolan and Henkle were the only members who appeared at the hour set for meeting and they concluded that respect for the opinions of their fellow councilmen demanded that no business be transacted in their absence. A meeting will be held tonight.

Next week Mr. Joshua Mason and family take their departure for San Francisco, where they will make their home. Chester leaves Monday, and his father and mother follow later in the week. A host of friends of Mr. and Mrs. Clum Read joined them in celebrating their silver wedding at their home in this city Wednesday evening. Twenty-five years ago on that date they were made man and wife. Mr. Read's acquaintances can scarcely realize that he has been married so long. His youthful appearance leads strangers to place his age at not to exceed 30 years.

Dewey Heywood, advance man for the Alba Heywood Company, arrived in town Wednesday. He arranged with the Jeffersonian Literary Society of the O A C for his company to appear at the Opera House on November 30th, or December 1st, the exact date is not yet determined. This company is said to be unusually strong this year, and besides Alba Heywood, the celebrated impersonator, there are fine lady singers and a lady violiniste. It is said that there is an exceptionally fine cellist with the company.

The Eastern Oregon Observer contributes the following interesting item on the recent election, which clearly illustrates that age does not cut much of a figure in a man's political enthusiasm: "Gen. John H. Steven, the well-known pioneer, who is 93 years of age, was driven to the polls Tuesday and carried inside on a chair, so that he could cast his ballot for Mr. McKinley. His first vote was cast for Andrew Jackson, in 1828, and he always voted the democratic ticket until 1864, when he voted for Lincoln's re-election. Since that time he has always advocated republican principles."

SOUNDS FROM WASHINGTON.

A Parcel of Interesting Items Penicited by H. L. Holgate.

EDITOR GAZETTE.—One Southern democrat in the census office was excitedly fervent in his predictions that Bryan would be elected. His predictions grew more boastful and more wild every day until he finally claimed that the Nebraskan would carry every state in the Union. Most of us only smiled at the foolish fellow, but one calculating republican concluded to make some money out of the Georgian's enthusiasm. He scraped up $30 and egged the Southerner on. "Bryan will carry every state in the Union," shouted Mr. Georgia. "Bet you he doesn't!" answered Ohio. "Well," said the man from the South, "Maybe not every one, but I will wager $5 that he gets every state but one and I can name that one." The bet was made and two five dollar bills were placed in an envelope and given to the stakeholder. The Bryan man wrote the name of McKinley's only state and put the paper in the envelope which was then sealed. He refused to say, however, which state he had written. It leaked out in his subsequent ranting that he was only afraid of New York. But he refused to make any more bets. As Bryan neared New York on his campaign tour, the Southerner went into fits and the day after Bryan's Madison Garden speech he insisted that Bryan would carry that one remaining state. "Bet you $25 he doesn't," quietly remarked the republican. The poor democratic fly went into the trap and $25 each was posted, the Georgian betting that Bryan would carry the state he had named in the envelope. After that Mr. Southerner was very calm and sensible. He seemed satisfied and had reason to be so, for it turned out yesterday that he had written "Texas" on the paper in the envelope.

Willard and Maud Hoffman begin their American tour in Boston in a few days. Miss Hoffman is a decided favorite in that city and the company will doubtless be given a reception that will go far towards making the tour a great success. Miss Hoffman's mother lives in Washington and will meet her daughter in the Blue Stocking city. She is visiting friends in Baltimore this week.

There is general regret that the result of the election in Colorado and Montana will retire from office Senators Wolcott and Carter, both very able men, but everyone rejoices in the defeat of Pettigrew. The Washington papers predict the return of Senator McBride, this forecast being governed considerably by their wishes, for the senator is a great favorite here.

Immense crowds assembled in front of the newspaper offices to see the election bulletins Tuesday night. As a change from the figures, pictures were occasionally flashed on the screens. Sometimes a battleship was shown. It might have been the Texas or the Massachusetts, but everybody said to everybody else, "the Oregon" and a mighty cheer arose.

I think the achievements and fame of that sea-fighter has something to do with the fact that nearly every departmental man I see wishes to "go west" and four out of five have their eyes on Oregon.

The Oregon men in the census office have been as a rule very successful. Mr. Alvin Patterson, of Heppner, has a very important position and the director has complimented his work publicly. Mr. Patterson has a number of K. of P. friends in Corvallis. Brady Burnett, of Corvallis, has made rapid advancement in the manufacturing division and he has been assigned to do special work. H. C. Allen in the population division, was one of five sent to direct the partial recount of Baltimore and was this week placed in charge of a section. Both have had their salaries increased. Messrs. Siltray and Muesderfer, of Portland, (the latter formerly 2nd Lieut. of Co. F, 2d Or. Vol) are assistant chiefs of important agricultural sections and Miss Ross, of Portland, has had her salary increased twice. John Pipes, a former Corvallisite, was rewarded for good work some time ago.

The fall weather in Washington has been delightful. The capital city certainly deserved it after enduring the trying hot spell.

The New Gold Fields.

Considerable enthusiasm is being worked up over the newly discovered mines near Detroit, on the line of the C. & E. spoken of in these columns a week ago. There have been quite a rush to the new diggings, among the goldseekers being a number of Corvallisites. The following dispatch from Detroit contains some interesting details. The experienced goldminer hasn't much confidence in the new find. This section is not in the gold belt, and while a color may be found almost anywhere, the trouble is to find it in paying quantity.

The new gold mines here are turning out even better than expected. J. O. Carter, Orin Judd, and Chris Newbold, owners of the W. J. Bryan mine, have driven a short tunnel in their claim and find that the ore grows richer with depth. There are a number of others being worked, and in each case the deeper they dig, the richer the quartz.

There is a great rush for claims, as it is very evident that the whole mountain is rich. Every day brings new prospectors, many of whom are old miners from the goldfields of Alaska. Many experienced miners after testing the quartz declare Detroit is destined to become a permanent mining center. Excitement runs high and on every corner can be found men examining and testing quartz. The mining district proper is about a mile and a half above Detroit, but there is a fairly good trail leading there now, as never a day passes but a number of parties go up there, prospecting and locating claims.

That Troublesome Cow.

A good many citizens of this place keep cows, which they have a perfect right to do, but now and then they stake them out with no regard to the law in the matter, or the rights of other people. No owner of a cow has a right to stake her along the property of anybody else without the consent of the property owner. Nor have they the right in any case to stake her where she can get on the sidewalks or across them, so that passersby are obliged to step over the rope.

Chief Plett had quite an experience a few days ago with a case of this nature. After once giving a certain lady in town warning about her cow, he found her staked in violation of the law and proceeded to lead the cow to the pound. The lady found that her cow was being taken off and gave chase, overhauling the chief. She raised quite a stir and threw her arms around the cow's neck. This move fooled the chief, as he thought that the woman was doing this to prevent him from leading the cow away. However she had another purpose, for she deftly unbuckled the animal's halter and let her loose. The chief succeeded in spite of the opposition in tying the rope around the cow's neck and took her to the pound. The outcome of the affair was that the lady's husband paid the charges for empounding the cow and took her home. This little incident may serve as a lesson to quite a number of people about the city.

Miss Lucy Pernot.

The death of Miss Lucy Pernot occurred in New York city, Monday afternoon. Accompanied by her mother she left Corvallis about three months ago for a trip to Europe, and was taken seriously ill on the passage across the Atlantic on the return trip. She was so ill when she arrived in New York, that on the advice of a renowned surgeon, she decided to submit to an operation, knowing that her life depended on it.

A year or two ago she began complaining of pains in her side, and on examination, her brother, Dr. Pernot, of this city, recommended an operation, but she refused to submit to the knife. The New York surgeon who operated on Miss Pernot found that the cause of trouble was an extremely large tumor in the region of the liver. Several complications were encountered and the patient never rallied after the operation and death ensued within 24 hours.

Lucy A Pernot was born October 26, 1854, in the city where her death occurred. Until her arrival in this city, October, 1889, she had passed life in the states of New York, Ohio and Michigan. She was highly esteemed by those intimately acquainted with her, and commanded the respect of everybody. Miss Pernot was an active W. C. T. U. worker and will be greatly missed by her co-workers in this city.

The remains will be brought to Corvallis for interment and are expected to arrive next Sunday or Monday. Her mother, of this city, and an aunt of New York city, will accompany the remains on the sad journey across the continent. Many friends express sympathy for the relatives in this great bereavement.

M. Johnson, John and Henry Bobell and Claus and John Linderman have just arrived at their home at Waldport, from Nome, Alaska. They have not brought out any fortune with them, but they say there is gold in the Nome country.

The Willamette river, which ten days ago was reported the highest it had been at that date in many years, being then twelve feet above low water mark, may now be said to be the lowest it has been for many seasons past at this date, says the Statesman. Yesterday the water stood at 2 1/2 feet above low water mark and it is slowly falling. If this fair weather continues for another week the water will, of course, go much lower. The reason assigned for such a sudden fall in the stage of the water is that the ground had not absorbed as much as it would hold, and as soon as the downpour of rain ceased the ground took up a great amount of the surface water.

Colonel Dosch advises prune-growers holding Italian prunes not to be scared by the reports from Salem. He says that offers of 6 1/2 cents have been refused, in spite of the report that no more than 6 cents can be obtained, and that the growers may consider themselves lucky to obtain that price. He says that fruitgrowers can easily get 7 cents for the larger varieties of Italian prunes. Furthermore, he says, the world's supply does not cut any figure in the marketing of the Italian prunes. This variety has a demand aside and independent for any other prune. In other words, the Italian prune is not affected by the demand or supply of other classes of prunes because it stands upon an independent basis of its own.
