

COMMENDABLE.

The assassin Czolgosz has been promptly tried and convicted and will speedily be placed in the electrical chair and quietly and humanely killed.

It is doubtless true that public sentiment has been more insistent that the violated law should be vindicated in the speedy melting out of stern justice to the offender because of the prominence of the victim, but this should not be so.

We hear much of the insufficiency of law to reach and punish crime. It has little or no foundation in fact. We have law enough; rather, indeed, too much.

As against anarchy, we have no specific law. We have very efficient laws against many phases of it, however, and if we insist upon the faithful administration of these we shall soon silence its blatant oracles.

The only thing these human devils understand and fear is force—everpowering force. They do not comprehend moral force. Physical force backed by moral force is a combination before which they cringe and sneak away.

Since we see how desirable and commendable the proceedings of the court at Buffalo, we turn with increased faith in the potency of a calm, dignified, determined and righteous public sentiment.

Selections from Roman History

After this (the year of rule by senators), Numa Pompilius was chosen king. He, indeed, waged no war; but he was not less useful to the city than Romulus, for he enacted laws and established usages for the Romans, who, on account of their habit of waging war, were already coming to be thought of as robbers and semi-barbarians; and he divided the year, formerly confused without any reckoning, into ten months, and set up at Rome temples, and religious rites without number. He died by sickness in the 43rd year of his reign.

Tullus Hostilius succeeded him. This man renewed the war, and conquered the Albans, who are twelve miles from the City of Rome. He also overcame in war the people of Veii and the people of Fidene, some of whom are sixteen miles from Rome, others eighteen miles; and he enlarged the city by annexing the Caelian Hill. He was burned to death in his palace, which was struck by lightning, when he had reigned two and thirty years.

After him Ancus Marcius, grandson of Numa by his daughter, assumed sovereign control. He fought against the Latins, annexed to the city the Aventine Hill and the Laculum (Mons Aureus or Montorio, from its sparkling sands), and founded a city on the seacoast, near the mouth of the Tiber, sixteen miles from the City of Rome. He died by sickness in the 24th year of his reign.

Then Tarquinius Priscus accepted the kingship. He doubled the number of senators, built the Circus at Rome, instituted the Roman games which remain to our time (i. e., 4 c. A. D.). The same man both conquered the Sabines and annexed not a little of their land, which was taken from them, to the domain of the City of Rome, and was the first to enter the city, celebrating a triumph. He constructed walls and sewers, and undertook to build the Capitolium. He was slain by the sons of Ancus, that king whom he had succeeded, in the thirty-eighth year of his reign.

After him Servius Tullius, son of a famous woman, yet a captive and a slave, assumed the sovereignty. He, too, subdued the Sabines and annexed three hills—the Quirinal, the Viminal and the Esquiline—to the city, and conducted trenches around the wall. He was the first to order the enrollment of all citizens, a thing hitherto unknown in the world. Under him, Rome, after all had reported themselves for enrollment, had eighty-three thousand souls, Roman citizens, counting those who were in the country. He was killed by the wickedness of Tarquinius the Proud, his son-in-law, a son of that king whom he had succeeded, and of the daughter whom Tarquinius had as wife.

Lucius Tarquinius the Proud, the seventh and last of the kings, whose race is not far from the city as you go toward Campania, subdued the City of Gabii and Suessa Pometia, when he made peace with the Etrurians, and finished the Temple of Jupiter in the Capitolium. Afterward, while besieging Ardea, a city situated on the 18th mile-stone from the city (of Rome) he lost his sovereign authority. For, when his son, and himself a Tarquin, but younger, had dishonored that most renowned and most chaste woman, Lucretia, the wife of Collatinus, and (when) she had, of her own, complained to her husband and her father, and her friends, for herself in the presence of all, for this cause [I say] Brutus, himself, too, a relative of Tarquinius, aroused the populace and took away the sovereign authority from Tarquinius.

The army, too, which was storming the City of Ardea, along with the king himself, then left him. Having come to the city, the king was shut out by closed gates, and when he had roiled four and twenty years he fled with his wife and children. So, during two hundred and forty-three years seven kings ruled at Rome. Yet Rome, when she possessed most, scarcely possessed fifteen miles of territory.

Mrs. Rebecca Kelly.

Mrs. Rebecca Kelly, whose death occurred Sunday morning at her residence in this city, was interred in Crystal Lake cemetery Monday afternoon, and the services were conducted by Rev. P. S. Knight.

The deceased was born in May, 1834, in Brooklyn, New York. She came to this state in 1878 and the following year established herself permanently in Corvallis. She was a member of the Congregational church and gave the lot on which the local church now stands.

The surviving relatives are, Mrs. B. R. Job, a daughter at Cottage Grove, another daughter at Detroit, Michigan, a son employed on a Manilla going transport and a son whose whereabouts are unknown.

P. T. Thomas, Sumpterville, Ala., "I was suffering from dyspepsia when I commenced taking Kodol Dyspepsia Cure. I took several bottles and can digest anything." Kodol Dyspepsia Cure is the only preparation containing all the natural digestive fluids. It gives weak stomachs entire rest, restoring their natural condition. Graham & Wells.

Consumption threatened—C. Unger, 212 Maple St., Champaign, Ill., writes: "I was troubled with a hacking cough for a year and I thought I had consumption. I tried a great many remedies and was under the care of physicians for several months. I used one bottle of Foley's Honey and Tar. It cured me, and I have not been troubled since." Sold by Graham & Wortham.

Don't be satisfied with temporary relief from indigestion. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure permanently and completely removes this complaint. It relieves permanently because it allows the tired stomach perfect rest. Dieting won't rest the stomach. Nature receives supplies from the food we eat. The sensible way to help the stomach is to use Kodol Dyspepsia Cure, which digests what you eat and can't help but do you good. Graham & Wells.
