

FREEDOM OF SPEECH.

Much of the prevalent abuse of freedom of speech arises from failure to recognize the limits of moral suasion. Just so far as we may employ moral suasion with men we should have, and do have, full liberty of speech.

We have usually borne with this abuse and have attempted through moral suasion and the force of right public sentiment to restrain it, or at least to prevent it from producing its legitimate fruits—disorder, violence, riot and bloodshed.

A public sentiment which would refuse to hear the diatribes of the female Goldman, which would refuse to read the yellow journal would ultimately reduce the mischiefs these work to a minimum, and render them comparatively harmless.

In addition to such public sentiment we need more frequent displays of personal courage by citizens who are atrociously maligned and abused by speech or press.

In Portland, a few years since there was published a vile, filthy sheet reeking with all the moral corruption it could gather and attacking the reputation and assailing the character of many of the purest and best men and women in the city.

A leading lawyer and prominent citizen was grossly maligned. He very properly and promptly invoked the law and gave the yellow journal such a lesson in ethics, as it never forgot, and with such results, financially, as the publisher has not yet ceased to feel.

But there are those who cannot seek such vindication. The President, for instance, virtually is debarrd from appealing to the law as a private citizen may. He must look to public sentiment for protection from indecent assault, and he soon finds that the law as a private citizen may.

When all this is done—and it should be done—there yet remains some classes or organizations which no moral suasion, no possible public sentiment can reach. Chief of these is organized Anarchy.

The anarchist is without moral fiber. His purposes are destructive of all moralities. If they were accomplished mankind would become a mass of seething putrescence, filthier, viler than any presented by the most degraded savages known.

Public sentiment can not reach them for they defy, always have defied it. Their doctrines are utterly destructive. They proclaim their purposes in the most vehement manner. The utter and forcible destruction of all government, the overthrowing of all organized society are their main purposes.

heed. Only when they see a greater force ready upon occasion to bear down upon and destroy them will they forbear.

Such instruments, looking to the display of necessary force upon these destructives, must be lawfully created. Back of these but ever ready to resort to their use, should exist such an overwhelming public sentiment that in it all, the most daring group of Anarchists may easily read the determination of the American people to preserve our sacred right of free speech from gross abuse and to defend our government and our social organization from all enemies, wherever found.

Wm. McKinley's Will.

The will of the late President McKinley has just been made public and is very simple in its form. He was worth at the time of his death about $225,000, including $67,000 life insurance.

"To pay my mother during her life $1,000 a year, and at her death said sum to be paid to my sister, Helen McKinley. If the income from property be insufficient to keep my wife in great comfort and pay the annuity above provided, then I direct that such of my property be sold so as to make a sum adequate for both purposes.

My chief concern is that my wife, from my estate, shall have all she requires for her comfort and pleasure, and that my mother shall be provided with whatever money she requires to make her old age comfortable and happy."

The will was drawn in Washington, D. C., October 22, 1897.
