IN CONTEMPT.

In Chicago a number of machinists who are on a strike resorted to "picketing" machine shops and iron works, where they had quit work, with the purpose of inducing the workmen who had filled the strikers' places to join in the strike and thus render it impossible for the operators to conduct their works. The operators obtained a preliminary injunction, issued by judge Kohlsaat of the U. S. District court. They then moved for a permanent injunction, and the strikers were required to appear and show cause why the motion should not be granted. The strikers did so and the court patiently heard testimony and argument presented by each party. The court reviewed the testimony, explained to the defendants that they were grossly violating law, that the evidence was quite sufficient to convict them of conspiracy against the operators, and clearly showed them that it was impossible to practice picketing without violation of law. His construction and interpretation of the law is just what has been given by every court before which a like case has been brought, and the instances are quite countless. Of course, the injunction was made permanent. It could not be otherwise. To the strikers, as law abiding citizens, but two courses of action then remained: To quietly obey the decree of the court; or to do this and carry it by appeal to a higher court. They did neither. Their authorized agent said; "We shall continue to post our pickets. The people are with us, if the law as interpreted by judge Kohlsaat is not."

These are men who represent organized labor—who never tire of asserting that they do not violate the laws, do not for a moment contemplate anything of the kind. Almost invariably, after appealing to the law, and obtaining a careful and just explanation and application of it they refuse to abide by it until punished for contempt, or forced by the constabulary or the military to cease their unlawful conduct. It is small wonder that multitudes of intelligent, law-abiding workmen refuse to identify themselves with the unions.

It is hardly probable that public sentiment in Chicago is in sympathy with such contempt for law. If it is, so much the worse for Chicago for the law and its interpretation as presented by the court applies to every city, every state in the Union, and eveywhere has the certain support of right public sentiment. The Chicago court will probably find a way to enforce its decrees and to punish contempt for its mandates.

The friends of labor—intelligent labor everywhere—must deplore this attitude of labor organizations toward the courts. They must see, thousands do see, that if every man is at liberty to construe the law for himself the end of all law is not far off.

But labor leaders and organizers essay more than this. They not only place their own construction on law, but insist that such construction shall be accepted by the entire mass of laborers. They attempt to decide, practically do decide, for the whole body of workmen, just to what extent they shall render obedience to law or whether, indeed, it shall receive any degree of respect and compliance.

This is one feature of the tyranny which a few men through the agency of "labor unions" exercise over the mass of laborers. It is a feature fraught with peril to all law, all order, all justice. It leads only to one result—destructive anarchy. It is anarchy. Its peril lies in the fact that it has a foot-hold in every state of the Union and weilds its pernicious influence over hundreds of thousands of men.

The people—the honest, thoughtful, law respecting patriotic people, must be brought to a realization of the perils which menance them from this direction, or ultimatly we shall have such a conflict as will dwarf any through which the nation has passed.

We see hopeful signs of the growth of a better sentiment in the ranks of labor. We believe the innate love of order, peace, justice and the spirit of patriotism which animates our American workingmen will avert the danger by throwing demagogues out of control of labor organizations and bringing these back to their just and legitimate purposes. All true friends of labor, all earnest patriots bid speed to that end.
