

OREGON'S OPPORTUNITIES.

That state which is so fortunate in situation and natural resources that its people may engage in agriculture, commerce and manufacturing has all the elements of material greatness and intellectual and moral progress. The Pacific Northwest, and no portion of it to a greater degree than Oregon, is exceedingly fortunate as respects both situation and natural resources. That our neighbor north of the Columbia river has gathered population and made progress along certain lines more rapidly than we have is not because she possessed any natural advantages over Oregon. It is rather because her people have been more actively public-spirited, and chiefly because her advantages have been persistently presented to the world by a powerful corporation deeply interested in her development. Our fields, forests and mines hold immeasurable possibilities of wealth, and all the prosperity which attends or follows the development of varied and exhaustless natural resources. Two magnificent rivers afford unequalled facilities for the transportation of our products to our chief city and seaport and thence to the markets of the world. Our wheat, flour, lumber, salmon and hops are already exported in large quantities, and because of their most excellent quality have found favor and increasing demand in foreign markets. Our new insular possessions and our trade relations with China and Japan promise incalculable commercial development to the Pacific Northwest, and to no portion of it so much as to Oregon. We have but to grasp our opportunities to insure our commercial supremacy. The development of manufacturing enterprises has received considerable attention and has made considerable progress. It would seem that more earnest effort should now be made to establish and to develop manufacturing enterprises. There are numerous products of the mill, the factory, the work-shop which now enter largely into our home consumption, and are in demand for export which we can and should produce. It is manufacturers rather than commerce and agriculture which employ large numbers of men, develop our latent resources and carry prosperity to the greatest number. Oregon's possibilities in this direction are most fortunate. We need but to lay hold of the varied material with which nature has so bountifully supplied us and fashion it into the countless forms of use and ornament demanded by our advanced civilization or required by the people with which we have commercial relations. There can be no question that capital judiciously invested in manufactures here in Oregon will find certain and most desirable remuneration. The salubrity of our climate, the wonderful productiveness of our soil, the wealth of our forests, the expansion of our commerce, the possibilities of our manufactures invite immigration. The capitalist may find profitable investments here; the man of small means can find his best opportunities here; and he whose sole capital is brawn and brains can win competency most surely here in Oregon. Pioneer conditions are past. Our communities are well established. Churches of all creeds are organized. Excellent schools of all grades abound. Every such advantage found in older communities are found here. In addition to these we present unexcelled opportunities to the honest, industrious and law abiding for home building and consequent happiness.

Selections from Roman History

A Literal Translation from Eutropius by C. MacLean, Ph. D. Successes in Spain—Scipio is recalled.

Meanwhile, when there was no Roman general, the two Scipios having been slain, Publius Cornelius Scipio, who had waged war in the same place, a man of all the Romans about the first, both in his own age and in later time, is sent to Spain in the twenty-fourth year of his age. He captures Carthage in Spain [i. e., New Carthage], in which the Africans kept all their gold, silver and implements of war. Also the most famous of the hostesses they had received from the Spaniards. In the same place also he captures Mago, brother of Hannibal, whom, along with others, he sends to Rome. After this message [was received] there was unusually great rejoicing in Rome. Scipio returns the Spanish hostages to their relatives. Wherefore nearly all Spaniards went with one mind to him. After this he conquers and puts to flight Hasdrubal, brother of Hannibal, and takes very large booty. Giving up hope that Spain could be held much longer against Scipio, Hannibal recalled his brother, Hasdrubal, with all his forces to Italy. He, coming by the same route by which his brother had come, fell into snares laid near Sena, a city of Picenum, by the consuls of Appius Claudius Nero and Marcus Livius Salinator. He was slain while fighting vigorously. His unusually numerous forces were captured or slain, and a great weight of gold and silver was brought back to Rome. After this Hannibal began to be in doubt touching the outcome of the war. Great courage entered into the Romans; and they, therefore, recalled Publius Cornelius Scipio from Spain. He came to Rome with great glory. SCIPIO CONQUERS IN AFRICA—PEACE IS DECLARED. In the fourteenth year after Hannibal had come to Italy, Scipio, who had done many things well in Spain, was made consul and sent to Africa. So much was it thought that a certain divinity was in this man that it was even supposed that he had conversation with the divinities. He fights in Africa against Hanno, the African general, and slaughters his army. In the second battle he captures his camp, together with four thousand and five hundred soldiers, eleven thousand having been slain. He captures Syphax, king of Numidia, who had joined himself to the Africans, and attacks his camp. By Scipio, Syphax is sent to Rome together with the noblest of the Numidians, and with enormous spoil. This thing being heard, almost all Italy deserts Hannibal. He, himself, is ordered by the Carthaginians to return to Africa, which Scipio was laying waste. So in the seventeenth year Italy was freed of Hannibal. Carthaginian envoys sought peace from Scipio. By him they were sent to Rome to the senate. A truce of five and forty days' continuance was granted to them, until they are able to go to Rome and return. And thirty thousand by weight in silver was received from them. The senate ordered peace to be made with the Carthaginians in accordance with the judgment of Scipio. Scipio grants peace on these terms: That they shall have no more than thirty ships, that they shall give five hundred thousand by weight in silver, and that they shall return [all] captives and deserters.
