

WILL CONGRESS FAIL?

It is almost inconceivable that congress should fail to authorize the construction of an isthmian canal. The people understand the commercial necessity of it and know that every section of the country would be benefited by its construction.

The nation is at peace. Our prosperity and rapid development are unparalleled. The government is financially able to undertake and successfully complete the work. The people see this and are more earnestly insistent than ever before that the work shall be undertaken at once.

It is well known that the opposition is principally by the great trans-continental railroad companies. It is altogether probable that many members of congress do not fully realize the character of this opposition and the far reaching, subtle means it employs in its work of obstruction.

With a congress pledged to build the canal it is not possible to defeat it by lobbying and bribery, nor by presenting choice of two routes and so dividing the counsels of its friends. It is popularly believed these means have been employed and they may be again, but other means will be used. These are measures of obstruction interposed outside of congress, and quite beyond congressional power to remove.

Although the people demand that the canal be constructed; although the two great political parties have pledged themselves to build it; although congress and the president be unanimously in favor of the project, it may be seen how easily the whole enterprise may be blocked by placing a few shares of transcontinental stock "where they will do the most good."

It may become necessary to do this. The menace of it may be sufficient, but if it do become necessary will it be done? Have republican leaders in congress the requisite moral courage?

The American people are in earnest in this matter. They have a way of displaying their courage, of achieving their purpose what ever difficulties may interpose. Once aroused by the mere suspicion that their servants are unfaithful they hasten to choose others. Inefficient agencies are cast aside and efficient ones employed. Let congress beware. By its failure to compass the purpose of the American people it may furnish the issue which, seized upon by some other party, shall drive the republican party out of power.

Selections from Roman History

A literal translation from Eutropius by C. MacLean, Ph. D.—Glossar Conquers Fast—Civil War.

Caesar, having entered the empty City, made himself dictator. Then he reached out for Spain. There he conquered the very sturdy and brave armies of Pompey together with their three generals, Lucius Afranius, Marcus Petreius and Marcus Varro. Then, having returned, he crossed into Greece, [and] fought against Pompey. In the first battle he was conquered and put to flight. But he escaped, because, the night intervening, Pompey was not willing to pursue him.

And Caesar said, Pompey knows not how to conquer, and only on that measure might he himself be able to overcome—et illis tantum dis se potuisse sperari. Then in Thessaly, near Pellophar salus, immense forces having been advanced on both sides, they fought. Pompey's line of battle consisted of forty thousand foot soldiers, six hundred cavalry on the left wing and five hundred on the right, besides auxiliary troops of the whole East, all the nobility, countless senators, praetors, ex-consuls and some who had already been conquerors in great wars. Caesar did not have in his line of battle quite thirty thousand footmen, and a thousand cavalry. Never before had Roman forces, either greater or under better generals, come together into one [place]. They could easily conquer the whole world, if they were led against foreigners, [and not against each other]. Yet the battle was fought with extraordinary exertion, and Pompey was conquered at last and his camp was plundered. He himself, having been put to flight, tried to reach Alexandria in order that he might obtain auxiliary forces from the king of Egypt, to whom he had been given as tutor by the senate on account of his youthful age. The latter [Queen] at the beginning of [his] sentence is equal to him, pursuing fortune rather than friendship, killed Pompey, [and] sent his head and ring to Caesar, when he saw it, is said to have even shed tears, beholding the head of so great a man and once his own son-in-law.

The Children's Friend.

You'll have a cold this winter. Maybe you have one now. Your children will suffer, too. For cough, croup, bronchitis, grip and other winter complaints. One Minute Cough Cure never fails. Acts promptly. It is very pleasant to the taste and perfectly harmless. C. B. George, Winchester, Ky., writes: "Our little girl was attacked with croup late one night and was so hoarse she could hardly speak. We gave her a few doses of One Minute Cough Cure. It relieved her immediately and she went to sleep. When she awoke next morning she had no signs of hoarseness or croup."

A Physician Testifies.

"I have taken Kodol Dyspepsia Cure and have never needed anything in my life that did me the good that did." says County Physician George W. Scroggs of Hall County, Ga. "Being a physician I have prescribed it and found it to give the best results." If the food you eat remains undigested in your stomach it decays there and poisons the system. You can prevent this by dieting but that means starvation. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure digests what you eat. You need suffer from neither dyspepsia nor starvation. The worse case quickly cured. Never fails.—Graham & Wells.
