At the opening of the second term at the college, a week ago yesterday, there were 407 pupils. By the end of the week the figure was 449. At the close of last term there were 432 students enrolled at the college, so that it will be seen that by last Friday there was a gain of 17 students. This does not include the pupils registered in the music department; including music students there were 462. This number will undoubtedly be greatly increased before long.

Andrew Carrick to become pastor of the church, and a committee of three, Caleb Davis, Henry R. Fleming and G. W. Denman were appointed to present the call before the Presbytery. The meeting was harmonious and pleasant.

What are the Figures?

How many people in Corvallis, or Benton county for that matter, know how much land belonging to the Agricultural College adjoins the City of Corvallis? Business men, and even members of the board of regents, have pleaded ignorance of the exact figures when the question was put to them during the past few days as to the number of acres in the college farm. About a week ago a stranger in the city, making investigation for the purpose of determining whether to locate here and send his children to school, asked numerous questions concerning the college. One man told him the school was under the domination of the Southern Methodist church, and 50 acres was the extent of its land holdings in Benton county. The pamphlet issued by the Citizens' League says 275 acres; quite a discrepancy.

The GAZETTE man has looked over the records in the office of the county recorder, and these seem to show that the college property adjoining Corvallis comprises 186.9 acres. The catalogue issued by the college states that its grounds comprise 198.91 acres. The question arises, what are the correct figures.

It is quite probable that there is a general lack of knowledge on matters relating to the college. There is one simple way to correct this condition of affairs, and place the people of this county in a position to enlighten strangers concerning our great institution of learning: A neat advertisement, containing facts and figures relating to the college, concisely compiled, and made to appear in the columns of the local papers every month of the year.

Such data would make interesting reading for subscribers in other portions of the country who anticipate moving to Corvallis to take advantage of the opportunities offered by the college.

A Truly Great Man.

The World-Herald, of Omaha, Neb., contains a partial list of the bequests made by the late Frank H. Peavey, of Minneapolis, and among them we find the sum of $2,000 bequeathed to N. P. Peterson, of this city.

Before coming to Corvallis last fall Mr. Peterson had been in the employ of Mr. Peavey for nearly eighteen years. He is one of the several hundred who have been remembered by the great financier. More than this, Mr. Peavey provided in his will that every employe who has been in the service of his firm for three years shall receive a month's pay, and the executors are instructed to retain the old employes and to care for them after they are too old to work.

Mr. Peavey was one of the most remarkable and commanding figures in the Northwest, and the most admirable character in the world of finance. He was born in Eastport, Maine, January 18, 1850, and died in Chicago, December 30, 1901. Left fatherless at the age of 9 years, he began his business career as a newsboy. By dint of hard work and conscientious, righteous effort he amassed a fortune and attained a position in the very front rank of business men. He was the head of the most extensive grain elevator system in the world, and carried the largest life insurance policy ever written. His life should be an inspiration to every young man who is carving his way alone, and his example might be emulated with profit by the Carnegies and Morgans of finance.

A few months before Mr. Peavey was stricken with the attack of pneumonia which resulted in his death, Mr. Peterson entered into correspondence with the great financier, his purpose being to get Mr. Peavey to purchase a large tract of the Coe lands in Lincoln county. In reply Mr. Peavey stated that he appreciated the opportunity offered for an excellent investment, but he had let contracts for the building of a line of steamships and made other investments which would require all the cash he could command at present. However, he would bear Mr. Peterson's proposition in mind.

Garrow-Emmett.

On Wednesday, January 8, 1902, at high noon, at the home of the bride's mother near Salem, Miss Anna Bertha Emmett, of Polk county, Or., and Mr. Joseph G. Garrow, of McCloud, Siskiyou county, Cal., were united in marriage.

Rev. W. C. Kantner, of Salem officiating. A very delightful company of friends was present to witness the ceremony and enjoy the festivities of the occasion. Following the interesting and impressive ceremony a magnificent wedding dinner was served. The parlors were beautifully decorated with ferns and mistletoe.

Mr. Garrow is a young man of excellent character and standing, a graduate of the O. A. C. and now holds a responsible position with an important lumber company operating at McCloud. Miss Emmett is well and favorably known in this city as well as in her home county. She was also formerly a student at the O. A. C. where she won a host of friends. The many useful and valuable presents of which this young couple were the recipients indicate the high esteem in which they are held. May theirs be a long life crowded with many happy hours.—Salem Statesman.

A Beautiful Staircase.

Mr. W. O. Heckert has just completed a new staircase in his residence on 5th street, and it is as handsome as a piece of parlor furniture. Only Oregon wood has been used in its construction and the ornamentation is all hand work. The newel post is made of curly maple and is beautiful in design. The panels are of the same material and finished in the natural wood, as are the balusters. The hand rail and portions of the grill are made of oak and finished to represent antique oak, while the panels under the stairs are given the appearance of mahogany. The staircase rises in a hall of ample dimensions, from which folding doors lead to the parlor, sitting room and dining room. These can all be opened, throwing these rooms and the hall all into one.

A landing reached by ascending two steps, has a window in front and at the side, making a cozy corner, which looks artistic and inviting.

"The Village Parson."

"The Village Parson," is to be given at the Opera House in this city on the evening of January 21st. Yesterday's Oregonian has this to say of the production and its reception at Cordray's theatre in Portland:

"The Village Parson" returned to Cordray's last night after an absence of a year, and judging from the reception it was accorded from a house that filled the theatre, there is truth in the proverb that absence makes the heart grow fonder. The applause began at the first intimation on the part of the wife of the prospected parson that she was an honest woman and would have none of the villain, and it continued with scarcely an interruption all through the long and weary separation of the good man and his wife, through the scene at the park where they are nearly reunited, through the biting poverty and bitter woe which is the lot of both, and to the triumphant finish. The play is crowded as full of heart interest as it will hold, but there is room for comedy here and there and the audience was as prodigal of its laughter as it was of its applause.

Last Saturday evening Mr. Leeper, of Spring Hill, had a runaway near the Smith place south of town, and came to town to get a vehicle to bring in what was left of the wreck. Sunday morning, M. D. His team took fright and emulating the example of Mr. Leeper's thoroughbreds, proceeded to demolish things. Dilley was present with an up-to-date phonograph and perhaps got more music out of the machine than would be possible for any other man living. Altogether it was a joyous occasion for the thirty odd people assembled.
