

INJUSTICE TO LABOR.

Labor, skilled and ordinary, contends that it is inadequately rewarded. This is an old contention and it has never been without just reason, if we look for the reason in the fact that labor does not receive a just share of the profits arising from the united efforts of capital and labor.

It is true that sometimes and for periods labor has been exceedingly well paid while the capital employed has not nearly earned the ordinary rate of interest; but this is a condition capital will not long endure.

It is no argument against this assertion of labor that it was never more fully employed and so well remunerated as now. While this is true it is equally true that capital never found it easier to establish profitable enterprises, and never gathered such golden rewards as now.

The outcome of this prosperity bears the suggestion that the new industrial conditions from which it springs have not inured to the benefit of the workingman to the extent they should. In the manufacturing world, especially, we see mighty combinations of capital formed under the names of syndicates, corporations, trusts.

It is true that the prime purpose in forming these has been to economize the cost of production and distribution of the finished commodity. It is also true this has been done and a high wage scale has been maintained.

Indeed, in many instances the wage scale has been advanced, yet the contention remains that the workingman has not been proportionately benefited. As evidence of this he points to the fact that men with comparatively little capital invested in such combinations rapidly amass wealth, so that in a few years they may retire from business with an ample competence, possibly the possessor of great wealth.

The working man, however, finds that he has reached the age of forty-five or fifty and so has fallen below the standard of efficiency required by the new industrial conditions.

His earning capacity has deteriorated. He no longer has the requisite nerve, snap, endurance. He finds himself crowded to the wall by younger men.

Most fortunate, indeed, is he if "with thrift and a good wife to manage," as Mr. Carnegie puts it, he finds himself the owner of his modest cottage, but sans bank account, and holding no certificates of handsome dividend-paying stocks.

His life of toil, even with industry and thrift, has given him little more than merely a subsistence. Small wonder if under these conditions he sometimes turns to socialism, is almost persuaded to embrace anarchy in search of more nearly equal conditions.

A brighter day is dawning. Strikes, lock-outs, mad assaults upon capital and its wise combinations, unthinking attacks on the very instrumentalities which have wrought our prosperity are giving place to a spirit of amity between capital and labor springing out of recognized unity of interest.

Voluntary arbitration of differences, participation in the profits of business to supplement liberal wages are already at work. These are the presage of better things to follow.

The contest has been long and bitter, but the end is in sight. The laborer needs but exercise patience, and careful intelligence. He is in sympathetic touch with the world, and will be accorded justice. Never before have so many men heartily believed that "the laborer is worthy of his hire" and held to this view in the spirit of its first utterance.

HOMER'S ILLIAD.

CHILD WORTH MILLIONS. "My child is worth millions to me," says Mrs. Mary Bird of Harrisburg, Pa. "I would have lost her by a cramp had I not purchased a bottle of One Minute Cough Cure." One Minute Cough Cure is sure cure for coughs, croup, throat and lung troubles. An absolutely safe cough cure which acts immediately. The youngest child can take it with entire safety. The little ones like the taste and remember how often it helped them. Every family should have a bottle of One Minute Cough Cure handy. At this season especially it may be needed suddenly. Graham & Wells.

to make thee, O King, the most contemptible man among all mortals who employ articulate speech, since, the same promise which they promised [lit. stood under] as they were still on their way hither [i. e. to Troy] from the horse-feeding Argos, that thou after sacking the well-walled Troy shouldst return home. For indeed like tender children and women bereft [of their husbands] do they mournfully join the one to the other to return homeward. Truly too it is a grief to return home tired out [with an unprofitable war]. For any one remaining away even one month from his wife and near his strong ship—anyone whom the wintry storms and the sea when excited keep back; but for us remaining here the ninth year is rolling round [i. e. we are here nearly nine years]. For this reason I do not take it ill that the Achaeans are sad near the curved ships. But even insipid of all that it is, I assure you, disgraceful both to remain [so] long and to return home empty handed. Cheer up, O friends, and remain a while longer in order that we may know whether Kalchas prophesies truly or not. For this we know well in our minds, as do you, whom the fates of death did not carry away, as witnesses: but yesterday, or day before yesterday [i. e. lately], when the ships of the Achaeans were mustered in Aulis [a Boeotian harbor on the Uripus] to carry calamities to Priam and to the Trojans; and we round about a fountain were offering among the sacred altars [Note: The Greeks had no temple here. The woods were at this time, as in the earliest times of their religion, their temples] to the immortal unblemished hecatombs, under a beautiful plane-tree, whence flowed clear water, then appeared a wonderful portent—a snake on the back all blood red, terrible, which, mark you, the Olympian himself sent forth to the light, gliding from beneath an altar darted directly to the plane-tree, and there were the nestlings of a sparrow, a tender brood, on the topmost branch, crouching under the leaves—eight, and the mother, which hatched them, was the ninth. See Gen. 41 chap. He now devoured them twittering piteously. And [as] the mother was flying round about, lamenting for her dear brood, he, having coiled himself, seized her by the wing when she was shrieking about. And when he had devoured the brood of the sparrow and herself, god, the very god who caused him to appear, made this portent very clear. For the son of crafty Kronos changed him [the snake] into a stone; and we who stood by wondered what had happened.

Thus then dire portents occurred at the time of the sacrifices in honor of the gods, and Kalchas then immediately said prophesying, "Wherefore have ye become silent with amazement, O long haired Achaeans? To us indeed the all-wise Zeus has shown this great wonder, late, late in its fulfillment, the glory of which shall never fade away. As that [snake] devoured the brood of the sparrow and the [sparrow] herself—eight, and the mother, which hatched the brood, was the ninth, so shall we wage war here so many years, but on the tenth we will capture the wide-wayed city." Thus he [Kalchas] spoke. Just now all these things are on the point of fulfillment. But come, remain all of ye, well greaved Achaeans, here, on the spot, until we have captured the great city of Priam."

Dr. C. J. Bishop, Agnew, Mich., says: "I have used Foley's Honey and Tar in three very severe cases of pneumonia with good results in every case." Beware of imitations. Graham & Wortham.
