

AS OTHERS SEE US.

The Seattle Post-Intelligencer has this to say of the election in Oregon, and the causes that led up to the defeat of Mr. Furnish.

Factional politics has worked out to its usual and natural result in Oregon. The state is securely and heavily republican.

It is a reverse in every way unfortunate. It is an undesired reflection upon the commonwealth of the Pacific coast.

Mr. Furnish was scratched not because he was a democrat a few years ago, although that probably detracted something from the enthusiasm of the more ardent party supporters.

This evil influence in Oregon politics has been faithfully cultivated and reflected by the only metropolitan daily newspaper in the state, the Portland Oregonian.

Where all are taught that parties exist to reward or punish men according to their attitude toward you, where both men and parties are pursued vengefully day after day and month after month because they have not followed dictation, they feel themselves eventually absolved from party allegiance and entitled to their innings.

It is most unhappy but it is not wonderful that the voters could not be made to heed appeals to party loyalty this year in support of the head of the ticket.

The following constables, road supervisors and justices of the peace were elected in the various precincts in this county, June 2nd:

Foley's Honey and Tar for children, safe, sure. No opiates.

Railroad Notes

Conductors report that passenger travel in Western Oregon has picked up perceptibly since the 3-cent fares went into effect June 1.

True is the saying that "the more people have the more they want." Residents of the various West Side towns are now wondering why the West Side trains could not be started out of Corvallis in the morning and return here in the evening and run on a swifter schedule.

This question is also in the minds of some Corvallisites. Why, if the C. & E. line is under the control of the Southern Pacific, don't the railroad officials have the local that now runs from Albany at 7 a. m. for Portland start from Corvallis at 6:30 a. m. and run it to the metropolis via Albany?

A year ago the C. & E. put on a special train to connect with the Albany local, but it did not pay, as a special train over a 10 mile road was too expensive, and the scheme was abandoned.

One of the greatest industries within the gift of Nature in the state of Oregon is just springing into life. It is dairying.

The annual catalogue of the Oregon Agricultural college for the year 1901-2 has just been issued and has this to say regarding what O. A. C. intends to do in the way of fostering this industry:

"One of the purposes of the Oregon Agricultural College is to advance the business industries of the state. It is believed that dairying is one of the most important lines of work that can now be undertaken in Oregon.

The commencement exercises of the Philomath College began last Thursday evening with a recital by members of the class in music.

The graduating exercises of the music class occurred last night. A most acceptable program was rendered to the satisfaction of all.

Tomorrow, at 10 a. m., the commencement exercises will be concluded. On this occasion orations will be given by George McDonald and Miss Teresa McDonald.

The following were elected road supervisors: Willamette precinct, Monroe Childers and Duke Gray; Alsea, H. H. McCormack and C. E. Banton; Bellfountain, Ed N. Starr; Monroe, J. R. Crow and Albert Zierolf; Corvallis No. 1, G. L.

Romance in Real Life. An affecting incident, with a faint tinge of romance, occurred in Assessor Wadsworth's office at the court house yesterday morning.

About forty-six or forty-seven years ago, away back in Allegheny county, New York, two chums, mere boys, parted one cold winter night in the road at the base of Basswood Hill, near the Kennebec river. They were the chummiest kind of chums. Tom was a big, strong fellow, slow to master his studies. Frank was of slender build, greatly inferior to his chum physically, but quick to learn. Tom fought for Frank and Frank helped Tom out in his studies and often kept him from reaching the foot of his spelling class by prompting him in a whisper when they stood beside each other.

Only once after they parted did Frank learn of the whereabouts of Tom. That was in 1863, when Frank was suffering from wounds received in battle and Tom was in the vicinity wearing the shoulder straps of a lieutenant-colonel. But they did not meet.

General Thomas J. Thorp of Corvallis, who has recently become acquainted with many citizens of Lincoln county while speaking in the interest of the Republican party, was Tom.

Assessor F. M. Wadsworth was Frank. One of Tom's fingers is missing. A playmate obligingly put it off with a hatchet, because Tom requested him to do so. The familiar name, after L. M. Star, had introduced General Thorp to Mr. Wadsworth, caused the latter to look for the stub finger. He found it, and a few rapid questions and answers brought the two old chums and comrades together just like sweethearts, and the tears of joy flowed, and the two grizzled veterans acted just like—just like—real, live human beings.—Lincoln Leader.

HOMER'S ILLIAD. Book II—A Literal Translation by C. Maclean, Ph. D.

Vv. 816-877. The forces of the Trojans. (Continued.) (Note: Of the Achaeans there were twenty nine contingents—sixteen from the Mainland of Greece, four from Iular Greece and nine from Thessalian Greece. To oppose these numerous forces there were of the Trojan people five contingents, and eleven contingents of allies. Of the allies three divisions were from Europe and eight from Asia. The total number of Trojans and allies was about 50,000. See Book VIII, vv. 582 and 583.)

Vv. 818-833. The Trojans: The mighty Hector of the gleaming helmet, the son of Priam, first of all, commanded the Trojans. With him were armed by far the most numerous and bravest forces—(men) eager with the spears (i. e. impatient for the fray). Next, Aeneas, the gallant son of Anchises, commanded the Dardanians—(that son) whom the divine Aphrodite bore to Anchises, (she) a goddess having couched with (him) a mortal in the valleys of Ida, not alone, but with him the two sons of Antenor—Archelechos and Akamas—well skilled in every kind of battle (i. e. on foot or in chariot, with spear or with sword). And those who inhabited Zelia beneath the lowest foot of Ida, wealthy Trojans, drink the black water of Aesepus—these, again commanded the illustrious son of Lycaon, Pandarus, to whom even Apollo himself gave his bow.

And those who inhabited Adrestia and the country of Apsarus, and inhabited Pitieia and the towering mountain of Tereia—these Adrestus and Amphius with the linen doublet commanded, the two sons of Perkosian Meopos, who above all (others) understood the art of divination, and did permit his sons to go to the manslaying war (i. e. did not give his consent to their going). But they did not at all obey him: for the fates of sable death led them on.

And those who inhabited Perkote and Praktius and inhabited Sestus and Abydos and the divine Arisbe—these, Asius the son of Hytakos commanded; a leader of men (i. e. heroes) (as) Aeneas the son of Hyrtakos whom fiery and large steeds bore from Arisbe, from the river Selleie.

Get your Job Work done here

To Run This Summer. Captain A. B. Graham, of the Oregon City Transportation Co., was in Corvallis last week looking after business for a light draft boat on the Upper Willamette river during the present summer.

The craft they are constructing is 125 feet long and will be very powerful and capable of as much speed as any boat on the river. It will draw between 11 and 12 inches light and with a cargo of 40 tons will not draw more than 18 inches of water. She will be the lightest draft boat that was ever put on the Willamette river. An electric light plant will be placed in the boat and a search light will be used in crossing the bars after night.

A steam, double drum wench will be placed on the bow of the boat. Just above every bar a "dead man" will be put in and a line made fast to it, while attached to the loose end of the line will be a barrel. The rope will be long enough to allow the barrel to float just below the riffle. On the arrival of the boat at the bar the float rope will be picked up and attached to the wench, and in this way the boat will be windlassed over the most shallow places.

E. F. Thayer, who has been identified with the O. R. & N. Co., will remain in this city and act as agent for the O. R. & N. Co. Mr. Thayer states that the company will give good satisfaction and, if it is possible to do such a thing, will operate the boat all summer. If the recent strike had not interfered with the work the craft would have been ready for service by July 1st. It now remains for our merchants and business men to give the new boat their heartiest support.
