

THE ULTIMATE PURPOSE.

Recent press dispatches convey the intelligence that the control of the American Shipbuilding Company will soon pass into the hands of J. P. Morgan and his associates.

The formation of the American Shipping Trust at first greatly disquieted our British cousins, but they are regaining their composure and are planning a big combination of their own.

Of altogether different meaning is monopolistic control of trans-continental trade. Admitting that unified control of such transportation economizes expenditures for construction, equipment, operation and maintenance, who are the beneficiaries?

CHANGED CONDITIONS.

Almost seventy years ago the manufacture of cotton duck, now transferred to Alabama, was established in Connecticut. At that time, and for many years following, there existed special reasons why the manufacture of this commodity should be conducted so far away from the locality producing the raw material.

Naturally manufacturers using large quantities of bulky or heavy raw material seek to locate their factories near to the source of supply. Failing in or deterred from this, they locate where they can most easily supply the demand for their finished product.

will be transferred to that section of the country.

With the race problem once solved the South will be able to reach a development along all lines far beyond the fondest hopes of her most devoted sons of the former regime.

Mr. Vogle Writes Again

Under date of August 17th, U. B. Vogle, formerly of this city but now of Lompoc, Calif., near the scene of the recent disastrous earthquakes, tells the GAZETTE readers of a recent trip made by himself, and his observations while en route. He says:

Having just returned from the "quake" district, I presume a little news of this section will be of interest to you. The road leading from Lompoc to the scene of the greatest volcanic activity is over one of the coast ranges of mountains, and a ride over it with a bike is as thrilling an experience as one can imagine.

We stopped to rest at a cabin on the road, and found it deserted, except for an entomologist, and he was busy with some taxidermists, and I think they will get his hide before long. The cabin was minus everything, excepting a dime novel and a copy of Huckleberry Finn.

There are places in the region visited where it looks as though a cyclone had passed through, leaving circular indentures in the earth.

Some places the ground has opened, leaving wide crevices in the earth. Streams of running water, that were very small before the shock, now seem to carry twice the quantity of water they did before.

In places the sides of the mountains have slid down, exposing large deposits of various minerals. Among other deposits exposed is a quantity of asbestos. This seems to be of a very superior quality.

It will resist fire, and can be woven in almost any form—it will be nice for future use. I claim to be the discoverer and originator of this proposition. So, you see, I am leaving some "foot prints on the sands of time."

A Scrap of History.

Mrs. Mary Croisan, of Salem, is visiting at the home of her brother, A. J. Hall, of Wells. The lady is the mother of Senator Ed Croisan, of Salem, and a pioneer of '49.

Mrs. Croisan was married to her late husband when the party reached the Platte river, another couple being married at the same time. Reaching Oregon, Mr. and Mrs. Croisan came to what is now Corvallis, living for a time on about the same plot of ground which the Oregon Agricultural College now occupies.

During their residence here, Mrs. Croisan, who, by the way, was but 17 years of age, walked from Corvallis to the Greenberry Smith farm near Wells, following the trail not far east of the foothills. As she sauntered along, she ran amuck of a band of Indians, and as she expressed it, "I thought I was a 'goner,' sure enough."

Mrs. Croisan is 73 years of age, but is remarkably well and active for a lady of her years. Though blessed with a family of devoted children, she prefers to occupy her home alone, in Salem, her husband having passed to the other shore many years ago.

Once More.

The Corvallis & Eastern Railroad Co., recognizing the value of a day's recreation and relaxation to the busy merchant, the over-worked clerk, and the toll-worn farmer, and knowing that both brain and muscle will be refreshed and strengthened by a visit to the briny deep, have decided to run another of their popular Sunday excursions from Albany, Corvallis, and all points west to Newport on Sunday, Aug. 24, 1902.

This will probably be the last excursion of the season, and the low fare of $1.50 from Albany, Corvallis and Philomath, has placed it within the reach of all. The numerous attractions at Newport are too well known to need further reiteration; suffice it to say, that the celebrated Chemawa Indian band of 24
