

OFFENDS ENGLISHMEN.

It was said of an English King that "he never said a foolish thing nor did a wise one." Our British cousins are almost persuaded to reverse this assertion and apply it to Andrew Carnegie. To have been so successful in life they are quite prepared to believe that he never did a foolish thing; but they are sorely tempted to believe he does not often speak wisely. His recent address at St. Andrews on the occasion of his reinstatement as rector of the university there has given great offense to Englishmen. It has been sneered at, ridiculed and derided by the English press. The head and front of his offending seems to have been that he appealed to the German Emperor to use his influence in forming a political and industrial union, a sort of European United States which should insure both the peace and the industrial supremacy of Europe. This was enough to disturb British equanimity, but when he declared that "it is a physical impossibility for Great Britain to produce material things rivaling in amount those of countries the size of America, Germany and Russia," he "twisted the tail of the British lion" in a very tender spot, for Englishmen begin to realize that England's industrial supremacy is rapidly passing away. The United States is destined to be, at no distant day, the supreme industrial factor of the world. Mr. Carnegie's theories may be crude and impracticable; his prophecies may be altogether visionary, but he evidently sees the facts which all thoughtful men on either side of the Atlantic ocean clearly recognize. They see that many of England's natural resources are well nigh exhausted; that jealousy and distrust among the nations of Europe maintain a militarism, particularly in Germany and Russia, which is a terrible incubus upon the development of their industrial energies. They see the immense territorial area of the United States, and her vast and various resources almost untouched; they see the skill, courage, intelligence and tireless energy of our people impelling us swiftly along every line of national development. With no jealous and distrustful neighbors; mighty enough in men and resources to meet any emergency, we put all our energies into our industrial life. It is questionable if Europe, even if united as Carnegie suggests, could prevent our world-wide industrial supremacy. "The most powerful weapon in conquering foreign markets is a profitable home market," he declared. This is good American doctrine. Our home market is worth more to us than the aggregate of all possible foreign markets. Thanks to the American doctrine of protection and the wise policies of the republican party, our home market has been preserved unto ourselves. Our people will pursue the even tenor of their way. They will not abandon those policies which are rapidly carrying us to the fore front of nations and the industrial supremacy of the world. Europe may follow whatever plans she chooses, it is utterly impossible for her to stay our industrial march by any itinerary she may attempt. Englishmen should rather curse their policy of free trade and ungenerous, selfish colonial conduct than grow choleric because of the blunt speech of a hard-headed Scot who sees the superiority of things American.

To aid the Fair.

The Woodmen of the World of Oregon have arranged for a series of demonstrations throughout the entire state this winter. This order has always been active in taking up any matter which it has been felt a fraternal society could consistently do. When the war broke out the Woodmen of the World immediately declared that all members who enlisted should be kept in good standing without any cost on the part of those entering the army. This action was remarkable in view of the fact that many insurance companies have a clause in their policies making the same void in case of death while in naval or military service. This patriotic action on the part of the Woodmen of World was followed by a great many of the fraternal orders of the country. When the idea was advocated that it would be right and proper and in harmony with the spirit of Oregon to erect a monument to the memory of the Oregon Volunteers, the Woodmen of the World immediately came to the front and by reason of their series of demonstrations three years ago, gave the movement such an impetus that its ultimate success was immediately assured and contributions for the proposition poured in from firms, corporations, individuals and societies throughout the state. No sooner had the Lewis and Clarke fair been broached than the Woodmen of the World prepared to assist it. The unanimity of sentiment in favor of the project which they are showing is remarkably. Realizing that if we are to enthrone the entire nation we must first become enthused ourselves, the Woodmen have chosen a splendid method of making the people think, and to think deeply, with reference to the 1905 fair, at the same time prosecuting their work of building up their society. They have chosen an unique badge, on which is a stump (official emblem of the order), on the face of which appear the letters, "W. O. W." These letters are the accepted initials of the Woodmen of the World, but the Oregon membership have given it a new title and call it "Wide-Awake Oregon Woodmen." There are four exposed roots on the stump. On the end of each, which appear sawed or cut off, are one of the numerals, thus completing the four figures, 1905. In Oregon this winter the Woodmen of the World will carry on an aggressive campaign securing new members, and their cry is nineteen hundred and five candidates in the state of Oregon, during the winter of 1902-3. This was done in order to fully fix in the minds of their membership, and the public generally, the 1905 fair. It is also the number of candidates the order could naturally initiate during the winter anyway. The Camps of the city of Portland have pledged to secure 905 candidates, allowing the remainder of the state to furnish the balance, an even 1,000. Following the usual social spirit of this order, district and county initiations will be held throughout the entire state. The Oregon Woodmen will close their series of demonstrations with great banquets and other social events and it is safe to conclude that both the World's Fair and the order itself will receive splendid assistance as a result of this activity on the part of the Woodmen of the World.

More Evasion.

ED GAZETTE: I believe your article of 24th inst. is sufficient to convince any impartial reader of the truth of what I before stated, "that you are willfully trying to misrepresent me." I will again state the facts which I have heretofore attempted to have you understand, to-wit: That the law of 1901 made it mandatory upon the Assessor to provide himself with such records. That the assessor asked the court to provide him with such records. That the county owned what was needed in the shape of present owner books and maps. That by posting said present owner books and maps only on the first day of March each year, they would be just what was needed by the assessor. That said books would remain with the Recorder, except when in actual use by the assessor. That the change in manner of posting would be of little or no inconvenience to any one. That the cost of making and maintaining another set would be avoided. That the court was composed of Mr. R. S. Irwin, Mr. W. A. Jolly and myself. That said court was unanimous for said change. Whether the court received information of the wants of the assessor, or that the Bowers slough bridge was in dangerous condition, "in session" or "out of session" is immaterial. (The GAZETTE may as well understand now that the County Judge proposes looking after the interests of Benton County "out of session" as well as "in session.") Whether the information regarding this or any other matter came through Mr. Jolly, Mr. Irwin or myself is immaterial. We had the information and acted accordingly. We have no apology to offer the GAZETTE or any one else for said action, but feel confident that time will prove said change of great benefit to Benton County, not only in aiding in the assessment but in proving and correcting up said present owner books and maps. I do not care to longer continue this matter for I believe the public now have the facts and by the facts I am willing to be judged. Yours truly, V. E. WATTERS.

point. From the outset he has not met a single proposition squarely, but has endeavored to draw attention from the original question to personal matters. His statement "that the law of 1901 made it mandatory upon the assessor to provide himself with such records" is absolute proof of what we have contended from the first, and is evidence that the court is usurping the prerogatives of the assessor when it attempts to do what the law makes it mandatory upon the assessor to perform. In conclusion the GAZETTE has this to say: It will discuss the acts of the court relating to business done by that body as representatives of the taxpayers of this county, whenever it considers such discussion legitimate and of interest to its readers. And no amount of intimidation will deter it from the performance of its duty.

MRS. L. S. ADAMS. Of Galveston, Texas. "Wine of Cardui is indeed a blessing to tired women. Having suffered for seven years with weakness and bearing-down pains, and having tried several doctors and different remedies with no success, your Wine of Cardui was the only thing which helped me, and eventually cured me. It seemed to build up the weak parts, strengthen the system and correct irregularities." By "tired women" Mrs. Adams means nervous women who have disordered meninges, falling of the womb, ovarian troubles or any of these ailments that women have. You can cure yourself at home with this great women's remedy, Wine of Cardui. Wine of Cardui has cured thousands of cases which doctors have failed to benefit. Why not begin to get well today?
