MONROE DOCTRINE.

The efforts of certain European nations to enforce settlement of their claims against Venezuela has caused considerable discussion concerning the Monroe doc-

In 1822 the ing concluded a very successful term of United States acknowledged the independence of Mexico and the South American states, and now encouraged by the friendly attitude of the British government president Monroe, in his seventh annual message to congress, Dec. 2, 1823, boldly asserted that "we could not view an interposition for oppressing them, or in control-ling in any other manner their destiny by any European power, in any other light than as a manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States. That a nation, within these lines, should be permitted, without let or hinderance to work out its own destiny was a new, a startling doctrine. Yet this is just the scope of the Canning- 7 weeks and 2 days. Monroe doctrine in both Europe and America. It has sheathed the sword of conquest in both countries, and restrains it everywhere. It is true that even English writers, prior to the close of our civil war have expressed doubts as to the Monroe doctrine being part of our national policy. When Napoleon 3d believed our hands tied by that struggle he furnished soldiers to establish and support an European government of Mexico. Quickly following the surrender of Lee the French government was given to understand it must quit Mexico. land was given to understand shoes all around, will be charged. that she would not be permitted to extend her sovereignty over Venezuelan territory.

Unfriendly critics of the present administration refer to this incident as it it were a case paralleled by the present condition of Venezuelan affairs. There is no similarity whatever.

In 1895 there was a dispute between England and Venezuela respecting the boundary of British Guiana. It appeared that England sought to extend her jurisdiction over Venezuelan territory. The president called the attention of congress to this in a vigorously worded message. The matter was submitted to arbitration and amicably settled.

In the present case the allies have emphatically disavowed any intention of wresting territory trom Venezuela. They are simply and only forcing a settlement of their claims which they have a right to do.
