The new corms formed will be the property of cultivators. Names may be given to the public school teachers and they will hand to secretary of C. I. A. Distribution of the corms will take place at the public school Saturday, April 11, 10 a. m.

Philomath Parents' Meeting.

The parents' meeting held in Philomath last Saturday was well attended by teachers and school patrons. Many farmers were noted present. The program was interesting and profitable. The talks and papers were to the point and covered the subject well. The regular program consisted of remarks by Mr. G. A. Peterson on "Teachers' Salary Problem;" remarks by Prof. S. W. Holm on "Co-operation of Parents with School Board;" remarks by Mr. T. P. Conner on "Co-operation of School Board with Teacher;" "Some School Difficulties" was discussed by Prof. S. I. Pratt, Miss Jennie Robbins, Mrs. Lois Clark. Prof. Henry Sheak read an excellent paper on "Temperance in Public Schools." The subject, "Child Study," was well and thoroughly treated by Profs. W. T. Wyatt and B. E. Emerick. W. E. Yates read an interesting paper and gave an enthusiastic talk on "Value of English in Public Schools." The address of Pres. E. D. Ressler of Monmouth Normal was an excellent effort. His subject was exhausted when he finished his remarks.

The literary program was one of the best yet rendered at any of the parents' meetings; a number of schools joining in this work. It consisted of recitation by Miss Ethel Weed and a song by Christa Neff, Philomath public school; recitation by Mary Henderson and Maggie McClum, Independent school; recitation by Maggie Dannel, Beaver Creek school; recitation, by Vada Newton, and dialogue by Lera Newton and Mabel Huff, of Newton school; recitation, Miss Bessie Meats and quartette music from College of Philomath; recitation, Miss Abrams, mandolin solo, Miss Cofelt, vocal solo, Miss Lena Band from Philomath College. A large number of baskets were brought and placed together for the basket dinner. The next parents' meeting will be held with the Bellfountain grange at their hall in Bellfountain on the third Saturday of this month.

Now in Los Angeles.

Ruthyn Turney is now at the home of his parents in Los Angeles, Calif. In a letter to a friend in this city, dated March 28th, he tells of a severe attack of illness he had shortly after leaving Corvallis. He says: "You remember I said I smelled a spell of sickness when I left? Well, after getting away from Albany I felt better until about 10 o'clock that evening, when I took a fit of coughing that developed a 'stitch' in my left side and affected the action of my heart. I shall always believe I nearly 'winked' out. The passengers and trainmen assisted me to a berth and did everything in their power to render me comfortable, but I passed a horrible night, and concluded to proceed direct home. On arriving here I had another hard spell, but not so severe as the one on the train nor of as long duration. Since my arrival have only been out of the house once.

"From what I have seen, I am very favorably impressed with this city. You will see more people on the streets of Los Angeles in a day than you will see in Portland in a week."

Preacher a Player.

A few years ago many of the Pacific coast papers were publishing entertaining accounts of the doings of one Rev. Edward Davis, who attained much prominence and notoriety as the enamorado of Payne Strahan, formerly of Albany, and by giving an exhibition of dancing in his pulpit in the Christian church of Oakland, Cal., as an illustration of his theory that mere dancing in itself was not harmful. On that occasion the Rev. Davis donned his claw hammer coat and in the course of one of his popular Sunday evening lectures, waltzed a little as an object lesson to his congregation. Some of the members liked the radical pulpit methods of their pastor, while others made strenuous objections to them; but all agreed that he looked handsome in evening dress. Some went so far as to suggest to him that he might be more successful on the stage as a leading man than as the leader of his flock. He seems to have taken their hint, for late advices from the east state that he has been appearing at the Star Theatre, in Williamsburg, in a melo-drama written by himself called "Over Niagara Falls." He says he is getting along first-rate, and making money to pay off some of the debts contracted in California, and that his drama is a soul-stirrer that show how vice is punished and virtue rewarded.

Oratorical Contest Tonight.

The Agricultural College Prohibition League was organized last February by Mr. Hinshaw, representative of the Prohibition League among the colleges, during his visit here at that time. The purpose of the organization is to study the liquor problem and to arouse the interest of the student body in this subject. An important feature of the work of the organization is an oratorical contest each year, the orations to treat some phase of the saloon problem.

The contest to select a representative from O. A. C. to the state contest, will be held at the college tonight. There will be five orations, and the winner will take part in the contest at Dallas the latter part of this month. The winner of that event will be awarded a prize of $100 and represent Oregon in the inter-state contest which will be held in Corvallis.

An admission fee of 15 cents will be charged at tonight's contest. Besides the orations, special music will be a feature of the program.

O. Healy Chosen.

The county camp, composed of delegates from the various local camps of the modern Woodmen of America in Benton county, met in Corvallis Wednesday to elect a delegate to the state camp which meets at The Dalles, May 6th.

Nine delegates were elected to the county camp, and seven were in attendance: E. J. Fowells, T. W. Dilley and O. J. Blackledge, Corvallis; E. H. Bellknap, Bellfountain; C. W. Davis, Philomath; J. G. Dennis and Robt. Kyle, Monroe. The camp met Wednesday morning at 11 o'clock and elected O. J. Blackledge, chairman, and J. E. Fowells, clerk. Adjournment was taken until 1:30 p. m. At the afternoon meeting O. Healy was elected delegate to the state camp, and E. H. Bellknap, alternate. The state camp will elect a delegate to the head camp meeting, which will be held at Indianapolis in June for the purposes of enacting legislation and making some adjustments in the rates of assessment.

Surprised Senator Daly.

A little incident occurred last Monday evening which illustrates the esteem in which Senator John Daly is held in this community. It was known that he might be called to Portland any day to take charge of the office of surveyor-general to which he was recently appointed, and it was felt that his departure should be fittingly observed.

Mr. Daly is not given to ceremony and display and his friendship is not of the obtrusive or demonstrative sort, and his friends knew that a quiet, unceremonious manifestation of their regret at his leaving, and some simple token of their regard, would be more highly appreciated and prized by him than a public function would be.

It was arranged with a friend, with whom Mr. Daly was to dine Monday evening, that he should make some pretext to get Mr. Daly to his office about 8 o'clock. In the meantime friends to the number of 12 or 15 had assembled at the Occidental, and shortly before the specified hour they went to Senator Daly's office and gained admittance by means of a pass key. When the latter's approach was heard, the light was turned down. The unsuspecting senator unlocked the door and struck a match as he stepped inside. He was dumb with surprise, when he saw his office crowded with uninvited guests. Then someone laughed and the spell was broken. When Mr. Daly had been given time to take in the situation, Professor Lake, on behalf of those present, presented him with a handsome gold-headed ebony cane. Mr. Daly was deeply affected and it was with difficulty that he controlled his emotions when he replied to Professor Lake's presentation address.

All present congratulated Mr. Daly on his recent appointment, and expressed their high personal regard for him and regret that his new duties would necessitate his absence from this community.

Frost Fighting Device.

Orchardists in this vicinity whose crops have suffered from the effects of frost in the past, may profit by installing the frost fighting device perfected by Mr. P. D. Bane, who owns a splendid 40-acre orchard near Redding, California. Mr. Bane is a brother of S. B. Bane of this city. He has given the matter of frost-fighting devices careful study for years, and the plant he has installed in his orchard is said to meet all requirements.

"What causes frost?" enquires Mr. Bane. He answers the question by saying: "Poorly drained air, and if by means we could prevent streaks, pools or basins of stagnant, cold air, we could prevent frost to a great extent."

"Not being able to combat with formation or location, we are forced to battle by means of artificial devices, or submit to nature though it often comes high."

"The vapor of water condensed to water and congealed to ice, is not of itself injurious. In fact, the action of the water throughout retards a too rapid change in temperature, and as frost is simply an index of temperature change, a friend rather than an injury to plant life. It cannot be emphasized too clearly that it is the low temperature and not the solidification of the water which does the damage: If there be but little vapor in the air there will only be a light frost appear and yet the temperature may be so low as to cause injury. A heavy frost when the top of the ground is dry is usually killing."

"It has long since been proven that the coolest air is nearest the ground, while a few feet above makes a difference of several degrees. After years of experimenting it is now a conceded fact that in order to ward off the damages caused by frost, you have to warm up the lower stratum of air in order to raise the temperature."

"With organized preparation along these lines already demonstrated to be valuable, frost can be successfully combated by warming up the lower stratum of air and diminishing radiation."

"This has been accomplished by using a large number of fires in pots with crude oil as fuel. The oil makes a very hot fire and is inexpensive when compared with its efficiency. By using a lid directly over the pots and a few inches above, the heat is kept down and forced to warm up the air by convection, keeping up a steady heat for hours. It is now generally believed that as much injury results from the sudden warming up of the chilled plant as from the chilling itself. It is now fully concluded by most practical frost fighters that there is no method superior to the one I have recently installed."

As the most critical time during a freeze is at sunrise, it is best to arrange the lighting so that the pots of oil will be burning at least one hour after sunrise. Mr. Bane has placed his pots much thicker around the outside of the orchard, as the wind or even the cool air has a double hold on these trees. About forty pots are placed to the acre and one gallon of oil put into each pot. A lid with three supports is placed directly over the pots leaving a space of about four inches between the top of the pot and the lid. This arrangement of the lid has a tendency to hold the heat downward and cause the heat and smoke to spread over more territory and stop any direct draft which would have a tendency to carry both heat and smoke upward. One gallon of oil will burn four hours or more.

The number of pots to fire on a cold night depends upon circumstances. When the location is an average one and the thermometer only drops a few degrees below the danger mark, probably 20 pots per acre will be sufficient. Should there be more heat than necessary, it can be checked by turning the lids upside down. This will extinguish the flames.
