On Monday, September 22, the Occidental Hotel reports the largest number of commercial tourists, of the entire season. The funeral of Clifford Gaylord Watts occurred at the residence of Mrs. Randall, September 29, and was conducted by Rev. Mark Noble assisted by Rev. J. Reeves. Here his mother was taken sick, and her mother brought her home. She passed away August 23, 1896. From that time Clifford has been in his grandmother's care. His father's death occurred three years ago in Sacramento. The Fascinating 'Frisco.

EDITOR GAZETTE.—San Francisco is larger than Corvallis. Mind! I lay no claim to original discovery in making this assertion, but it's true and serves as an introduction for some rambling remarks. The city seems satisfied with its present size, so far as area is concerned, and is buying itself with improvement rather than enlargement. And there is room for improvement. And there is room for enlargement. There are tumble-down, one-story wooden shacks even in the business center on Market street, that are worse in looks than the buildings that went up in smoke in that Sunday afternoon blaze in Corvallis, a few weeks ago. But these are being replaced by brick and stone structures. One cannot go two squares in any direction on any of a dozen streets on either side of Market, without finding a business block in course of construction, enlargement or improvement. New pavements are being constructed, and cobble stones are being replaced with asphalt.

It is surprising the number of Oregonians who find their way to this city. I never overlook the opportunity to impress upon a new acquaintance that the Willamette Valley has California faded to a ghostly paleness when it comes to the matter of scenery and natural resources. And in three cases out of five my new found friends have endorsed my contention and informed me that they, also, were from Oregon.

George Clark, formerly foreman of the printing office at the O. A. C. is here. He was married in Oakland about three months ago. Shortly after taking this important step, he moved to this city and is now employed in a laundry on Mission street.

Mr. and Mrs. Mort Spangler have taken up their residence in Oakland, where the former has an excellent position as a draughtsman.

I met a Miss Whitney, of Portland, a few evenings ago. Old Corvallisites may remember her and her brother, Ed. They attended the Agricultural College, before that institution was removed to its present site.

Raymond Henkle came in from Corvallis the other day and we lunched together. Raymond is casting about for a good business location, and is now in San Jose. It is a safe wager that he will terminate his search by deciding to remain in San Francisco. No one who has lived here long seems to be satisfied elsewhere. Old "Frisco" has a fascination all her own. She is prodigal in her generosity, and her devotees are ever finding some new charm. Let San Francisco know a thing is good, and she will have it or something better. The cost is never taken into consideration. This spirit of liberality pervades the atmosphere, manifests itself in a thousand ways. There is enough electricity burned on Market street in a single night to light Corvallis for a hundred years. (If that statement sounds extravagant, it is proof that I am not immune.) The effect of the many colored lights is dazzling and beautiful. The fronts of buildings are ablaze with signs, the letters on which are formed of red, green, blue or white globes of light, some revolving, some swinging and others alternating in colors. High in the air, glowing from the top of some sky-scraper, letters of fire seem hanging from the sky; while the headlights on the street cars throw their searching rays along the ground. Who can see "Frisco" after night, and not want to be a moth around her flame?

There are but twenty-five letters in the alphabet of a San Franciscan: "R" is eliminated. To be sure, they say "ah," here, when "r" is intended; but "ah" is only a sound of "a". This is not said in adverse criticism. One grows to like the practice. I find myself becoming susceptible. "I feel snub that I shall succumb beneath the wintah is ovah."

The Margarita Fischer Company.

Miss Margarita Fischer, the "16 year-old favorite," and her own Metropolitan Company who will appear at the Corvallis Opera House for a season of two nights, commencing Monday, October 5, comes to us highly recommended. The well balanced company of players have astonished every one by the phenomenal manner in which they have attracted the public attention this season. Their presentations of high class repertoire being one of the many reasons for their unbounded popularity.

The gentle realism displayed in the characters of the comedies and dramas and the truthful manner in which they are portrayed on the stage appeal irresistibly to young and old alike. One must be the most hardened cynic to witness any of these performances and not feel that the human emotions have been stirred.

There will be new and funny special ties between acts, doing away with those long waits and delays to which one is so accustomed.

They carry their own uniformed band and orchestra, giving a street parade and concert daily during their engagement. Admission 50, 35 and 25 cents. Reserved seats now on sale at Graham & Wortham's drug store.

Dr. Darrin's many remarkable cures fully demonstrate the fact that he has mastered the secrets of electricity in the treatment of disease, and that he possesses an exceptional knowledge of the curative properties of medicines.

The fact that he has successfully treated a well-known resident of this section, will influence other ailing persons hereabouts in the doctor's favor.—Stayton Mail.
