RELIGIOUS TRUTHS.

Pray that you may pray.—John Mason.

We, who must love our neighbors as ourselves, must also pray for them as for ourselves.—Jeremy Taylor.

Being forgiven, to forgive—so God makes the godlikeness which He gives visible through action for the help of other men.—I. O. R.

Penitence and holiness are near akin. It is by way of penitence, self-renunciation, lowliness of spirit, that men draw nigh to God.—R. J. Campbell.

In all your works, either at home or at the place of your service, do not forget that all your strength, your light, and your success are in Christ and His cross; therefore do not fail to call upon the Lord before beginning any work, saying: "Jesus, help me! Jesus, enlighten me!" Thus your heart will be supported and warmed by lively faith and hope.—John Sergeff.

We do not know, in our ordinary living, the full privilege of prayer; and therefore it loses for us, sometimes, its richness and its blessing. But when we let it range throughout the whole circle of life, it makes God a personal friend to us—one to whom we can turn at any moment, and one through whom we can rise above the perplexities, and lose the anxious cares that press upon us.—Timothy Dwight.

Being Satisfied.

Things never can satisfy any heart of man or child. They please for a time, but we grow tired of them. We see their limitations, and we "want the earth." But even that would bring us no satisfaction. It is not in things, but in persons that we find the most lasting delight. The child's happiness in its mother's love outlasts all the pleasures its toys and playthings ever can give. Yet even to our joys in the persons we know—the closest and dearest—there are limits. Each is a segment of the great circle of life. It suggests the rounded and completed circle, but it always stops short of that. So the human leads on to the Divine, the complete, perfect, inexhaustible personality of God, disclosed to us in His Son. In Him is the joy and content of men, or in Him we see the perfection we have vainly sought in others. And in the perfect personality alone can we find perfect satisfaction.—S. S. Times.

WHO IS MY NEIGHBOR?

World's Needs Are Great, But Our Only Care Should Be the One We Can Help.

When a man's interests and affections are scattered over the whole wide field of humanity, he does not often count for much in practical social service. Dilution counts against efficiency. It is easy to be in theory a lover of humanity, after the order of the Pecksniffs of the earth, and to be unkind and unloving toward our immediate neighbors. Therefore, according to the Congregationalist, the law of God does not say, "Thou shalt be a lover of mankind," but rather, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. Its grip is specific. The one man who is within reach looms up out of the fog of a generalized humanity with his individual claim to consideration.

Neighborly willingness is one thing, neighborly activity another. The one awaits its opportunity, the other grasps and uses it. In Christ's thought it is opportunity which makes neighborhood. The man who fell among thieves was the neighbor of the priest and Levite the moment his need came within their reach. The people of India were not within our active range of neighborhood until the way was open to serve them with the Gospel. When the famine came the opportunity of neighborhood increased. If a man is out of reach we are not to waste our energies in worry over his trials and privations. But if God in any wise brings him and us together, though he be at the ends of the earth, his need and our opportunity make him our neighbor.

Christ presents the problem in its simplest elements, making it a primer lesson of the true spirit of neighborliness. Practically, under our modern conditions of world communication we have a more complicated problem to solve. Suppose the Good Samaritan with the wounded man upon his breast had come upon another victim of the violence of thieves. Suppose he had come upon a battlefield where the wounded lay in heaps. Suppose all the money in his purse would only have sufficed to bring him home and put bread in the mouths of his children till he could earn something more. We have our responsibilities which we cannot wholly set aside for the most urgent outside calls. We have to use our strength and means with care, and to make them go as far as possible. The needs of all the world are calling to us. We sometimes fear to stop and think, so bitter is the cry of suffering. But God is in charge. We must do our part and leave the rest to Him.

Yet just because the story is so simple, it sets the few essential elements of the neighborly spirit clearly before us. The priest and Levite could not be good neighbors, for they were selfishly unloving. The Good Samaritan found a neighbor where he found a need. If we seek an answer to the lawyer's question, we must find it along these lines. If we have the true love of our brother, we shall find no lack of opportunities for putting it in practice. We shall be tempted neither to dissipate our neighborly activities in sentimental talk and feeling, nor to think, with morbid self-reproach, that God has put upon us the whole charge of His world. The man whom we can help will be our neighbor, given of God, and we shall do for him up to the measure and in the due proportion of our ability with a loving and a quiet mind.

Sanitary Food for Cows.

If the cow has a tendency to be constipated, increase the proportion of oil meal in her ration. If her bowels become too loose, decrease the oil meal and increase the bran. If the cows have a tendency to put on too much flesh, decrease the cornmeal or discard it altogether. If she gets too thin, give her more cornmeal and less of the other foods. If straw and corn fodder are high, limit the feed to eight or ten pounds a day. If these rough foods are cheap, give 20 to 25 pounds a day to each cow and use what is uneaten for bedding.

Poor Calves Are Expensive.

If the calf is not a good one it would be better to knock it in the head and feed to the chickens, rather than raise it for the dairy. It does not cost five cents more to raise a good calf than it does a poor one, and the cow that will make 300 pounds of butter a year has eaten no more up to the time she drops her calf than the one that will make only 150. There is not a fortune in the dairy business in any event, but if we raise calves from poor cows from which to make up our future herd, there is a loss. — Rural World.

The milk cow is very responsive to kind treatment.

NORMAL SCHOOL,
EUGENE, OREGON

This school will open June 27 and continue for a term of six weeks to August 5. The object of the school is to furnish teachers—and those preparing to teach—an opportunity to study methods and to raise their grade of scholarship. Mr. Dixon has devoted many years to the study of the needs of the grades. He has conducted three summer schools in Wisconsin and is well prepared to help teachers in just what they need in their daily work. Mr. Haroun is president of the Eugene Business College. His work there during the past year has been highly successful. Two other men have been employed to help in the work. Write to F. S. Maroun, Eugene, or W. W. Dixon, Albany, Or., for a circular. Board and tuition reasonable.
