WHAT ONE BOY DID.

His Manly Rejection of the Proffered Wine Helped to Reclaim a Profligate.

They were just sitting down to the table, 12 boys, their faces bright, their eyes sparkling with the anticipation of the dinner that was before them. It was Clifford Ray's birthday and his mother had said he might invite 11 of his friends to a dinner party.

Clifford was an only child and an only grandchild and, strange as it may seem, he was blessed with three grandmothers. The way he came to have more than his share of grandmothers was that his mother had married again, so there was her mother, his father's mother and his stepfather's mother; stranger yet, they lived together, to all appearances, in peace and concord, and vied with each other in petting and spoiling Master Clifford.

The boys lost no time in starting on the good things, and they ate as only healthy, growing boys can eat. They did not talk much at first, they were too busy for that; but they enjoyed themselves thoroughly, which made Mrs. Ray and the three kind old grandmothers who waited on them, beam with pleasure.

After they had got fairly started, Mrs. Ray unlocked the door of a little cupboard, built in the wall, and said, smilingly: "Now, boys, I'm going to give you your choice of some very fine wine. I have all kinds here, and you can take your choice, in honor of Clifford's birthday."

"Oh, that's fine, mother!" exclaimed Clifford. "Come, boys, what kind will you have?"

No one answered, so Mrs. Ray turned to the boy at the head of the table, George Warner, the biggest of the 12, and the most popular; George usually took the lead in everything.

As Mrs. Ray turned to him he answered, politely, but without the slightest hesitation: "I won't take any, thank you, Mrs. Ray."

The boys looked at him in surprise, and Clifford's mother said: "What! Not any wine? Oh, you are not so particular! Of course it wouldn't do for boys to make a practice of drinking it; but this is something extra, and a glass won't hurt you; it will make a man of you."

George was tempted to reply that he knew just what kind of a man it would make of him, he had seen men like that; but he did not like to say anything rude to Mrs. Ray, so he answered politely but as firmly as before: "No, thank you. I really can't take it. Please don't urge me!"

"Come, now! You won't refuse a lady, I'm sure!"

All eyes were turned on George. He colored slightly as Mrs. Ray poured out a glass of the sparkling beverage and set it before him; but his resolve was not shaken and he repeated: "I'm sorry to have to refuse you anything, but indeed, I can't take it."

Mrs. Ray was evidently annoyed. "Well, I won't press you, if it's against your principles to drink it," she said, and turned to the next boy with: "Well, you'll take it, Harry Clark?"

George's refusal had given Harry courage to act. He knew his mother would not want him to take the wine; but he would not have been strong enough to refuse if it had not been for his friend's example, so he said: "I don't believe I'll take any, either, Mrs. Ray."

Frank Miller, who sat next to Harry, said the same, and so it went all around the table until it came to Clifford.

"You'd better shut up the cupboard, mother, I don't believe any of the fellows want it."

Then they went on eating their dinner and were soon as merry as if the interruption had not occurred. The incident was seemingly forgotten.

But there was one who did not forget it. In the next room there was a listener of whom none of the boys were aware. Mrs. Ray's brother had long been a source of trouble to his family. It was the old story of bad company and then all sorts of dissipation. He had tried one business after another, to make a failure of all. At last he had gone away, and his family hoped that the separation from his old companions might reform him; but he came back an utter wreck and failure.

Howard Morse had come in white the boys were at dinner. He was sober then; but he intended going out later in the evening with a number of boon companions, and "making a night of it" as usual. The door between the dining-room and the library, where he had thrown himself down on the divan, was open, and he heard his sister's offer of the wine and George's refusal.

It reminded him of the time when he took his first glass of wine and then he thought of the events which followed. Like all drunkards, at times he would have given anything he possessed to break the awful bondage, and he now wished heartily that when he had been offered his first glass he had, like George, had the courage to refuse. Then the thought came to him: "Am I going to be outdone by a boy 12 years old? What he can do, I can; it isn't too late yet. If God will only forgive me and help me, I'll never touch another drop."

A few minutes later the boys and Mrs. Ray and the three grandmothers were greatly surprised to see Howard Morse walk into the dining-room and greet them cordially. Since he had started on the downward path he had kept taciturnly to himself when he was at home, and avoided meeting any of the people who visited there. This was a new Howard, surely!

After dinner, instead of hurrying out of the house, he joined the boys in the library. He was so entertaining, instituting new games, and telling thrilling stories, that no one could believe the clock right when its hands pointed to the hour for leaving.

Reluctantly the boys went home, after bidding "Uncle Howard" a hearty good-night.

As George was going Howard caught his arm and drew him aside.

"I want to tell you, George, that you have saved me to-night."

George's eyes opened wide in astonishment. "Saved you? I?"

"Yes; it was your example in refusing the wine, that set me to thinking, and I resolved never to touch another drop of liquor or have it in the house. I would like to join your temperance society. I want to help save others who have been as low as I was."

George was very happy that night, and when he prayed to his Heavenly Father he did not forget to thank Him for the privilege which had been given to him to save a soul by his example.

Howard Morse kept his word. He not only joined the temperance society, but later on the church, and was well known throughout the community as an earnest worker.

Some years afterward he started out as a temperance lecturer and was the means of leading many from the "broad way that leadeth to destruction." And in all his lectures he never failed to give credit to the boy who had stood firm for his principles, and by his example pointed him to the way in which he was now walking.—Anne Guilbert Mahon, in Union Signal.

THE CIGARETTE MUST GO.

Enormous Increase in the Annual Consumption of These Coffin Tacks.

An investigation has lately been made into the question of the number of cigarettes annually smoked in the United States, and an enthusiastic statistician has discovered that ten years after the smoke of the first cigarette was blown from the lips of the pioneer of American cigarette smokers, the annual consumption amounted to 1,000,000. This was about the year 1874. It reached the billion mark in 1884, and five years later it was 2,000,000,000, and in 1893 it was 3,000,000,000 annually. A comparison of these figures and periods of progression in the habit will give some idea of the rapidity with which it spread. For instance, while it took a period of five years, from 1884 to 1889, for the consumption to increase from one billion to two billions, it required only four years to add another billion to the statistics. In 1894 and 1895 the figures made another big jump, and in 1898, the latest year for which statistics are available, the number of cigarettes of all kinds, foreign and home-made said to have been sold in the country, approximated the enormous amount of 4,000,000,000. Placed end on end these 4,000,000,000 cigarettes would almost encircle the earth, and what is of far more importance, if the money thus annually expended were turned into charitable channels, it would put a pair of shoes on every child in the country, and purchase the necessaries of life for 100,000 families!

TEMPERANCE BITS.

The liquor shop will go in a hurry when the church goes for it in real earnest.—National Temperance Advocate.

A grog shop is the devil's sign that he is still doing business in the neighborhood.—National Temperance Advocate.

A saloon keeper discharged a clerk for getting drunk. A distiller advertised for two tectotals to run his still. A drunkard is at a discount with all people. Even the devil wants a more respectable man than a drunkard to work for him.—Baptist Reaper.

The National Temperance federation has prepared a memorial to the Canadian government urging precaution against multiplying incentives to drunkenness and lawlessness in the northwestern parts of British North America.

Here is an advertisement we saw recently in a Rockford paper: "Wanted—a cobbler to take charge of repair shop in our store. Must be strictly sober and good workman. Permanent job for the right man." No good business man wants a drinking, unsteady workman in his employ. This merchant sells shoes. Other merchants sell groceries, dry goods, clothing, drugs, etc., but no matter what they sell they want sober clerks and sober workmen. Even liquor dealers prefer bar keepers who are total abstainers, and frequently advertise for such men. Who wants a drinking man, or even an occasional drunkard, around him? The liquor business condemns itself.—Lever.
