While on his way to his boarding place, Monday night he met with a peculiar experience.

When only a short distance from his destination he was halted by the command "Throw up your hands I tell you, throw up your hands." That command emphasized by a mighty voice and a big dangerous looking revolver brought Garrow to a standstill. When he did not obey the first command the thugs thrust their gun up to Garrow's face then Theo. did the surrendering act on short orders.

While one highwayman covered the victim with his gun, the other went through his pockets getting $26 all the money he had. The hold-up occurred on Tenth street between Main and Madison.

ADAM'S ALE.

A Farmer's Example and Advice to a Young Man Who Used the Devil's Brew.

It was a very warm day when Father Welden began plowing the south meadow, where the grass had grown rank. His forehead became moist and his throat dry, as he followed the plow across the field. Over in the corner where the bushes cast a shade he had placed a jug full of a drink that never failed him when thirsty. He drank from it several times during the day. On the other side of the fence a young man was lying on the ground in the shade. He had been asleep. His eyes were red; he looked wretched. He was thirsty. He awoke just as Farmer Welden left his horses and went over to the corner near where he was lying. He saw him lift his jug to his lips and take from it long draughts. It made the young man feel still more thirsty to see the farmer enjoy his drink. He jumped up quickly and shouted:

"Hallo! What have you got there to drink?"

The farmer turned quickly, meeting the eyes of the young man eagerly fixed upon him and his jug. He felt sure, however, that the drink that satisfied him would not satisfy the younger man. He beamed upon his visitor a kindly smile as he replied:

"Oh! it is nothing that will hurt man or beast, I assure you, if it is in a jug. It is only pure Adam's ale, brewed this morning under the elms you see over yonder. Will you have a pull?"

Then he rested the jug upon the fence, and the young man drank as if he was burning with thirst. When he had finished the farmer said to him:

"You'd better drink more of this kind of ale, young man, and less of 'tother, hadn't you?"

"Yes, sir, I had," was his reply. "I wish with all my heart that I had never tasted anything stronger."

"Well, then, young man, take an old man's advice, and stop at once. I can drink as much as I please of my Adam's ale and feel none the worse for it. Instead, it freshens me up, and makes me strong and steady for work. I reckon you cannot say the same of yours."

"No, sir, I cannot. I am wretched this morning."

"Yes, I see you are."

After a few more kind words and good advice, which were listened to because given so kindly, the older man swung down the jug into the shade, gathered up the reins and said to his horses:

"Come, lads, get up! Go 'long there, Bill! What are you about there, Doll, old girl? We must be after them thistles lively."

His advice is just as good for us as it was for the young man. Adam's ale is the safest drink, the best drink for everyone. Why is it called "Adam's ale?" Because it was the drink God supplied for Adam in the Garden of Eden.—National Advocate.

AMERICAN REFUSES A DRINK.

Incident on Board a Steamer Which Illustrates Danger of Putting Temptation in Another's Way.

A man who lately came over from America told the writer that on board the steamer one of the passengers went up to another in the smoking-room and asked him to have a drink with him. The man thus invited continued reading a newspaper and made no reply. The other man again asked him to drink with him. No answer again. A third invitation was then given in these words:

"Sir, I have asked you in as friendly a way as possible to drink with me, and each time you went on with your reading, and had not the civility to answer me. Now I ask you for the third time if you will drink wine, whisky, or anything else with me?"

The man then put aside his paper and answered quietly: "Do you see that glass, sir? Well, if I were to take even a quarter of it, I could not leave off until I had drunk all the liquor on board. This is why I would not drink with you."

All present admired the man's self-control and learned a striking lesson on the danger of putting temptation in a brother's way.—The Quiver.

Saloonkeepers Barred.

A saloonkeeper in Wisconsin belonging to the Modern Woodmen has objected to being expelled from that order by the new rule which forbids the receiving or continuing as a member a liquor seller. As he was a member before the new rule was adopted, he appealed to the courts. The supreme court has decided against him, declaring the rule constitutional.
