TOUCHES OF BATTLE.

Men Who Laughed When Bullets Hit Them—The Work of a Torpedo—A Fly Crawl.

Capt. Ruthven W. Houghton, 523 West Fourteenth avenue, has just received a pension of $30 per month for services valiantly performed. He is a striking old gentleman of about 60, of massive frame, and clear, youthful face, and to an admiring youthful friend who congratulated him on his good fortune he drifted back immediately into reminiscences of the war, which he told with an inimitable grace and humor, says the Denver Post.

Capt. Houghton was brought up in Haverhill, Mass., and enlisted with the Third New Hampshire as first sergeant of a company on July 27, 1861, and served with the Army of the South under Sherman till October, 1864, when sickness forced him to leave the service. In the action at Seclusionville, S. C., on June 12, 1862, many of the officers of the regiment were killed, and Mr. Houghton was promoted to second lieutenant. He fought at Port Royal in 1861, and at Bermuda Hundred, Drury's Bluff, and Deep Run in Virginia in 1864, but the engagement he loves to tell about was the series of battles beginning at Morris Island on July 10, 1863, and ending with the assault of Fort Wagner on September 7 of the same year.

"We were under fire every day for these two months, you understand," he said. "But see here now," as his modesty began to battle with his recollections, "you don't want me to tell you about this. There are plenty of other people. Did I see Col. Shaw, of the Fifty-fourth Massachusetts, killed? Yes, I did. There was a fine officer, now. And let me tell you, too, those colored troops of his were about the fine fellows as there were in the army. I remember that charge as if it were only yesterday.

"We lay there on the sand hills in our intrenchments all day," he continued, as his face lit up with a smile of humor and recollection. "We had been under fire from Forts Wagner, Moultrie, Sumpter and countless batteries hidden in the sand. Out in the harbor a whole line of federal monitors and gunboats had been battering away at the seagull all day, but they were in sand batteries, and the shots didn't do much harm.

"Just at sunset—it was the 18th of July, if I remember rightly—Gen. Strong rode up, and passing between the platoons said quietly: 'Boys, I want you to take that fort, and I don't want you to fire a shot. Use your bayonets.' And we didn't. We marched up to within 20 yards of the fort, under a perfect rain of shot. Alvin Libbey, our adjutant general, rode directly up to the breastworks and was shot in two by a grape shot, and pulled into the fort.

"Whole companies were cut to pieces, especially among Shaw's colored troops, who never flinched. But we couldn't get any further. Strong ordered Col. Jackson to take his men back to the intrenchments. Just as he gave the order a round shot took away the breast of Col. Jackson's coat, and at the same time Gen. Strong put his hand to his leg. 'Are you hit?' asked Jackson. 'No much, I guess,' laughed Strong.

"I was standing close at the time, and you can't imagine the strangeness of hearing two men laughing about being hit with all that racket around them. Most of the events of battle one doesn't remember, but that is as clear a picture to me as the moontains yonder. Gen. Strong died from his wound less than a fortnight later, while on his way home.

"ARE YOU HIT?" ASKED JACKSON.

Capt. Houghton himself received three wounds during his service, two of which were scratches and the other a wound in the forehead which left a large but almost imperceptible scar. He had to be persuaded to talk about himself and wouldn't say anything about his wound for some time. Finally he related how he, then a first lieutenant, was sent on the night of August 31 to make a reconnaissance of Fort Wagner, where the Confederates were suspected of making a sally.

"It was awfully dark. We crawled out over the intrenchments, one at a time, across the sand, making for a little ditch right under their walls. I was in front and had told the men to follow, when I heard a shot. I looked around, a bit dazed, but couldn't see any of the boys. I guessed they must be coming, though, so I went into the ditch. I waited two or three minutes, but nobody came. Then Cor-

Try for Health

222 South Peoria St., CHICAGO, ILL., Oct. 7, 1902.

Eight months ago I was so ill that I was compelled to lie or sit down nearly all the time. My stomach was so weak and upset that I could keep nothing on it and I vomited frequently. I could not urinate without great pain and I coughed so much that my throat and lungs were raw and sore. The doctors pronounced it Bright's disease and others said it was consumption. It mattered little to me what they called it and I had no desire to live. A sister visited me from St. Louis and asked me if I had ever tried Wine of Cardui. I told her I had not and she bought a bottle. I believe that it saved my life. I believe many women could save much suffering if they but knew of its value.

Surgeon Dumber

Don't you want freedom from pain? Take Wine of Cardui and make one sincere effort to be well. You need to be a weak, helpless sufferer. You can have a woman's health and do a woman's work in life. Why not secure a bottle of Wine of Cardui from your druggist today?

poral Bigsbee crawled in, looking queer, though it was so dark I could scarcely see him. 'Where are the boys?' I whispered. He looked up at me, shook his head and said nothing. I asked him twice more and then fearing we were discovered, I crawled back to the intrenchments.

"On the way I ran across the body of one of the boys and a big hole. That shot I heard was a torpedo. I must have passed directly over it myself, but didn't happen to hit the cap.

"Well, we were up all that night, and next day as I was pretty well tired, I lay down on a tarpaulin on a little slope inside our lines. The boys fixed a blanket to keep the sun off, and I guess I must have gone to sleep, though there was a fearful racket, too. Anyway, the next thing I knew I was lying down at the foot of that sand hill, and Charles A. White, my second lieutenant, was standing over me tying up my head. I felt something moving up here over my eye, and thought it was a fly, and when I put up my hand to brush it away it was blood. My arm was all shot full of powder, too, though I didn't know it at the time. The whole thing didn't amount to much, though the doctors tell me that is what fixed me as I am now," for the captain has in recent years become a paralytic, and moves with much difficulty.

PLEASURE BEFORE BUSINESS.

An Incident That Called Forth a Reversal of the Axiom by General Palmer.

"Speaking of rain," said the colonel, relates the Chicago Inter Ocean, "most of the Army of the Cumberland have good reason to remember the campaign in 1863 against Tullahoma. Our division, Palmer's, moved forward in splendid condition, and ready, we thought, for anything that could turn up, but we were not ready for the continuous rain that came upon us. It rained day and night, made the roads like mortar beds, filled the streams so that we could not cross them, washed away bridges and flooded whole districts. One day our regiment stopped in front of a house with a wide, comfortable porch. While we sat there in the rain Gen. Palmer rode up and took a seat on the porch, sheltered from the rain.

"It was soon noised about that the command had been halted while the engineers reported as to whether the stream in front was fordable, or, as the boys put it, whether it was more than this deep. A cavalryman galloped back from the front, rode up to the porch, threw the reins of his horse to an orderly, and started up the steps with his saber clanking, when a young lady standing in the door sprang forward, threw her arms around his neck and kissed him. This unexpected greeting caused the company standing near to cheer, and there were shouts of 'Pass it around; don't keep a good thing all to yourself.' Gen. Palmer turned and, taking in the scene, said, grimly: 'Pleasure before business. When you get through, young man, will you report to me?'

"The cavalryman turned embarrassed, saluted and reported that the stream in front was not fordable, and that the water would not probably run out for four hours. 'And you are glad of it, I suppose,' said the general. 'I don't understand this way of doing business, but you probably do; but I want to say one thing, the next time you carry a message attend to business before pleasure.' While the general waited on the porch our regiment marched off and went into camp in what the boys called a goose pasture. When the men learned that the young lady who had given the cavalryman such a hearty greeting was simply a sweetheart of his at Murfreesboro they lost interest in the case. They had hoped that she was some southern girl who had met him previous to the war.

Farthest North Civil War Fight. During the last term of the Schuyler county court a discussion arose among the attorneys one evening as to the location of the most northern battle of the civil war. Several of the United States histories refer to Lee's attack on Meade at Gettysburg as the scene of the most northern battle. There was a skirmish at Lancaster in November, 1861, and a regular pitched battle at Athens, in Clarke county, Mo., in which several were killed on both sides. The latter fight occurred the first Monday in August of that year. Both of these points are 60 or 70 miles north of Gettysburg, and were close to the Iowa line. In all three of these northern battles of the war the federals were victorious.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

No Alternative. "That's a terrible noise in the nursery," Mollie, said the mistress. "What's the matter? Can't you keep the baby quiet?" "Shure, ma'am," replied Mollie, "I can't keep him quiet unless I let him make a noise."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.
