HORTICULTURE

TWO HANDY ROLLERS.

No Market Gardener Can Afford to Be Without One of These Convenient Implements.

The garden and flower beds require firming of the surface after planting, to insure even distribution of moisture and perfect seed-germination. This is necessary also in starting a lawn, and frequent rollings will destroy ant hills and rout many soil pests that accumulate in neglected plots. In my own experience I have fully proven the benefits of rolling, and would not attempt growing a garden, lawn or flower bed without some means of leveling and firming the rows and beds. The surface does not bake so hard in spots where the beds are properly leveled and rolled; the seeds sprout more uniformly and the plants grow better, while the work of weeding is lessened and the appearance much more than pays for the care in properly preparing the seed beds. But every farmer does not have sufficient cash at his command to purchase all necessities though the tools may be cheap and small, hence some homemade implements are often brought into use. Hand garden rollers may be made at home by any person familiar with the use of tools.

A cheap roller, large enough and good enough for even the professional kitchen gardener, may be made for 50 cents or less, and with proper care will last for many years. The material I used in constructing this handy tool consisted of a joint of six-inch stovepipe, a split oak sapling and a small two-inch board nailed across the split just behind the roller. The pipe was well riveted with wrought nails; a short apple tree limb, with old bolts driven in either end, was put in the pipe and packed solidly in gravel and sand, and an inch board was sawed out to fit the ends, and nailed in, after tamping the sand and gravel. Auger holes bored in either side of the split handle made that fit nicely, and to strengthen it wire nails were driven through and bent on both sides. A support to hold the tongue or handle off the ground was made by nailing an eight-inch peg in an auger hole at the point where the split stopped. The roller could be pushed or pulled back and forth, over and across, and did most effective work.

The small roller proving inadequate as a clod crusher and leveler, where the soil was rough and uneven, I made a larger, stronger and more durable tool after the fashion of a wheelbarrow. In this I used the six-inch stovepipe filled with sand and gravel, and iron spikes driven in a center square block for an axle. The frame was made of two by four-inch scantling, with boards nailed across for bottom, and a dashboard of eight-inch plank nailed to upright standards just behind the roller. This made a platform for weighting the roller, by giving the children a ride or putting in some rocks. The legs may be left off, if desirable, and the roller can be made of wood to suit the circumstances. In this roller, however, where much weight is needed, the stovepipe is hardly heavy enough, and a round block of wood, even one foot in diameter, is preferable. This roller can be used in the same manner as a wheelbarrow, and is a very handy, inexpensive tool that more than pays for its manufacture in one season, and will last a great many years if properly handled.—Joel Shomaker, in Farm and Fireside.

Melon Vines in Rows. Most people are so used to planting melons in hills that they deem this the only way. But very successful melon growers think that making a very slight ridge and planting the seed in a row pretty closely together is a better way. So soon as the vines begin to run their tendrils clasp others, and this keeps them from being blown about by winds. By making the ridges eight or more feet apart the cultivator can be kept running through them until the vines spread out and occupy the whole of the vacant space, which they will surely do before the summer is ended. If the vines appear to be too close together in the row the poorest may be cut out without leaving a vacancy, as would be the case if they were planted in hills.

The Bartlett pear, we think, is the best pear ever grown; and if you can put into cold storage until the glut in the market is over, you can get a good price for it.

Do not work late among raspberries or blackberries, or they will not mature.

FEMALE WEAKNESS

542 1-2 Congress St. PORTLAND, OREGON, Oct. 17, 1904. I consider Wine of Cardui superior to any doctor's medicine I ever used and I know whereof I speak. I suffered for nine months with suppressed menstruation which completely prostrated me. Pains would shoot through my back and sides and I would have blinding headaches. My limbs would swell up and I would feel so weak I could not stand up. I naturally felt discouraged for I seemed to be beyond the help of physicians, but Wine of Cardui came as a God-send to me. I felt a change for the better within a week. After a few days treatment I menstruated without suffering the agonies I usually did and soon became regular without pain. Wine of Cardui is simply wonderful and I wish that all suffering women knew of its good qualities.

Wilhelmina Snow
