USE ABSORBENT BEDDING.

Its Weed in the Stable Is Known in Theory, Although Much Meglected in Practice.

Too much emphasis cannot be placed on the necessity for having plenty of absorbent bedding in all stables for two reasons, namely, to promote the comfort of the animals and to save the manure, especially the liquid excreof it. The need of clean, dry, abundant bedding must be generally known theoretically, although much neglected in practice. The value of liquid manure is, however, a thing people in general riness along educational lines, who are very slow to learn or to do anyis steady, industrious, temperate, gen- thing about. Among the best absorbial, polite, discreet in talk and actions ents may be mentioned sawdust, straw. and who spends his spare timeat home and land plaster, Sawdust, an excellent and in proper company, may address, fertilizer in itself, retards the decomposition of the manure, but rots quickly when mixed with it. Where it is cheap and accessible, nothing better can be had. As most farmers have more straw than can possibly be used for feeding purposes, this is a most common and on the whole a most excellent bedding. Land plaster, where obtainable, is an excellent absorbent for stables, especially to hold the excessive ammonia in borse stables.—Prairie Farmer.

Extracted vs. Comb Honey.

Here in the east the comb honey in attractive shape commands a far larger call than the extracted does and more so during the last few years. The light weight foundation, pure and nearly transparent, has done away with the "hobo" of tough center comb which the consumer kicked on. What looks more pleasing than a fine cake of comb honey. well filled? On the other hand extracted honey cannot be put on table in as good form, though it be put up in packages to suit the eye. The consumer has such a fear of adulterated goods that he prefers the comb honey which he knows is pure.-Geo. H. Townsend, 'in Ohio Farmer.

MAKING THE ARMY USEFUL Agricultural Paper Suggests Employment of Idle Soldiers in Construction of Highways.

Gen. Miles has been developing a scheme whereby the army when not in ervice, which is most of the time, may ue relieved of the monotony of a life with othing to do but eat and sleep, and at the same time be of some practical use to the country. He proposes that they be supplied with modern road machinery and set to improving the roads of the country. There is much good hard sense in this proposition. There has recently been considerable effort made to restore to the soldier the privileges of the canteen on the ground that in his enforced idleness there were other and worse evils, which were liable to take possession of his time when the canteen was refused him. We believe the propositer to Uncle John and telling him tion to give him something to do will relieve the monotony of his position in a way that will be far better for him and for the country in general, and certainly more to the credit of the nation. So long as these regiments must be maintained at public expense, why not have them employ their time in a way that would be for their good and of practical value to the general public. While our army is vastly smaller than that maintained by most other countries of similar proportions and the expense of maintaining it is consequently less burdensome, yet if it can be employed at some useful occupation this burden will be still farther reduced. Every little helps in cutting down the expenses, and with the large and increasing demands for public improvements along various lines all over the country, it is certainly advisable to adopt economic changes wherever practical.—Prairie Farmer.

Advance in Land Values. The advance in land values has been very marked during the past six years. Good agricultural lands are steadily increasing in price, and there is no prospect of a reduction or decline. Our population increases steadily, while there can never be any more acres of land on the earth's surface than at present. It annually requires more of farm products to feed the increasing population, and prices must therefore rule higher and higher and farming become more and more intensified and remunerative.-Midland Farmer,

Save Your Horse Hides.

It has occurred to us that farmers and horse dealers are not generally aware of the fact that horse hides, whether taken off from slaughtered horses or those which have died by disease or perished from other causes, have market value. Farmers should not allow the hides of their fallen stock to go to waste. Fair-sized horse hides, free of cut holes and other blemishes, are now bringing from $3 to $3.25 in Milwaukee.
