EDUCATING YOUNG HORSES

Proper Bearing and Training of Colts Is a Task Requiring Skill and Experience.

The horse always has been recognized as man's closest animal companion, and it is a question as to whether the man ever lived who did not delight in driving or riding a good horse. This subject is of particular interest to every man who raises or handles horses. An old saying is that eggs and colts are much alike, for they must be broken before they can be used.

The proper breaking of a colt, says John Buckler, who has charge of the live stock at the Iowa experiment station, determines in large part the future usefulness of the horse, and no man who has dealt in horses and experienced difficulties in their management will deny that there is much room for improvement in that line. Every day brings fresh illustrations of improper breaking. Less than a week ago a man drove down to the experiment station barn, driving a horse that had been handled for more than two years that had not been taught to back. This is only one of many similar cases.

Besides the losses resulting from improper breaking, thousands of dollars are lost to the farmers every year by selling horses that have not been properly fitted for sale.

In breaking, the first thing to be considered is the nature of the horse. The dispositions of no two horses are exactly alike. There is also a great difference in the draft temperament and those more highly bred, such as trotting and coach horses, the former requiring much less preparatory handling than the latter.

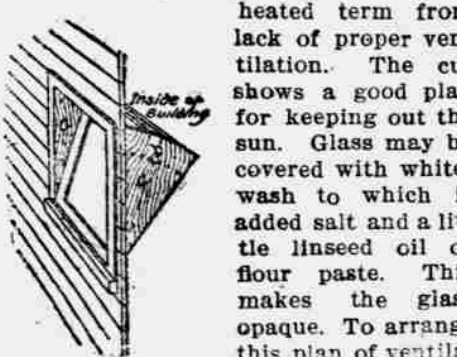

After studying closely the disposition of the colt, the next step is to halter, and in this, as well as all other periods of the breaking, the person in charge should exercise patience. The colt should be gotten into some shed or box stall, preferably one with a ground floor, so there will be no danger of slipping. Now, with halter, to which is attached 15 feet of rope, gently work around the colt, caressing him as much as possible, so as to win his confidence, and when he sees you are not going to hurt him you can usually put the halter on without any trouble. Now, presuming this colt to be one that will pull on the halter, take the loose end of the rope and pass it through a hole in the manger or around a post, back between the fore legs, around the girth and tie. The colt is now tied by both head and body. Step back and let him fight it out, which will take only a short time. And when tied in this way there is no danger of injury as is sometimes the case when tied by the head only. As soon as he gives up pulling go to him and caress him, and by so doing give him to understand that you are his friend. It is well to leave him tied for some little time, after which he may be led.

Leading is a very important part. A horse well broken to lead is more attractive, easier to handle, and will command a higher price in the market than one that is not. In training to lead, always teach the colt to walk beside you and never allow him to follow along behind, as is often done. This can be done by taking a whip in the left hand, touching him up a little from behind. After being well trained to walk beside you, encourage him to trot.

GOOD BARN VENTILATION.

How to Construct a Vent Which Keeps Out the Sun and Freely Admits the Air.

The animals in most barns and other farm buildings suffer much during the heated term from lack of proper ventilation. The cut shows a good plan for keeping out the sun. Glass may be covered with white-wash to which is added salt and a little lincsed oil or flour paste. This makes the glass opaque. To arrange this plan of ventilation the window is hung on hinges at upper edge. Side pieces are at an angle are attached to either side of frame as shown in cut. This side piece also keeps out much sunlight that otherwise would come in at the sides of the window. The window is raised or lowered and adjustment secured with pins in the holes, as shown.—N. E. Homestead.

A Menace in In-Breeding. There is a menace in in-breeding if it is carried too far. The most careful breeders of cattle, those that have in the past built up the great herds to which we refer as the foundation of our improvements in cattle realize this and it was to them the most serious problem with which they had to contend. Fortunately animals increase so fast that the time is quickly reached when matings may be made between animals quite distantly related though all of the same blood.—Farmers' Review.

Profit Comes from Observation. Aim to keep hogs for profit; that is what everybody keeps them for. Some are doing it, and some are not. The only way to successfully raise hogs, or to succeed in any other occupation, is to study and observe the work. In these days of strenuous competition, it requires close management to make anything out of it, yet there is always room for more of the best. No matter how many hogs you have, strive continually to learn more about the industry.—Midland Farmer.

Steady work of any kind is fatiguing, and although the change may not be for lighter work, it may be restful and refreshing for the teams.

Religion vs. Morality and Justice.

The motives which appear to inspire the actions of some religious bodies today are certainly not such as to draw toward them the seeker after morality and justice, but rather to drive such far away from them, and to drag down religion as a whole into the disfavor and ridicule of every disinterested spectator. This observation might be illustrated by many events of church history, of which only two or three recent ones are here to be noticed.

The case of the divided Presbyterian church of Scotland today, various factions of which have been at law with each other for years over church property, and when riotous and bitterly revengeful acts toward one another had in some instances to be quelled by the government forces, is one instance in point. Another instance is the woman in Portland who willed her property to the church and, trusting the latter to draw up the will, found herself dispossessed in her old age and sickness by her beneficiaries and driven to a charitable institution penniless to die. And a third instance is the one recently decided by the supreme court of Oregon, prosecuted by the First U. B. church, of Eugene against J. L. Aiken, as administrator of the estate of Uncle Peter Mason, and Aiken's bondsmen, J. W. Ingle and J. Q. Rogers.

Like the Portland woman, Mason was induced to will his property to said First U. B. church of Eugene, and, like her, trusting her beneficiaries to draw up his will, subsequently discovered that that will was drawn so that he also could have been dispossessed in his lifetime. From this predicament, however, death suddenly relieved him, and his friend, Dr. J. L. Akin, was appointed his administrator. As is customary in the cases of minor officials, Dr. Akin's neighbors, J. W. Ingle and J. Q. Rogers, went on his bond—innocently and unsuspectingly and as a mere favor as all bondsmen do in such cases. It happened that Dr. Akin at the time of his appointment, owed the Mason estate the sum of $803, but being insolvent, this debt could not be collected of him and was therefore worthless to the estate. However, on a mere technicality of law, First U. B. church of Eugene discovered that this debt could be made good by collecting it of the bondsmen, and that they at once proceeded to do and finally accomplished; so that the bondsmen now stand to pay, on account of innocently favoring their friend by going on his bond, a sum of about $1200, of which J. W. Ingle has already paid in $618.25, which includes cost and interest. He has for long years been a liberal supporter of the U. B. church though at the same time struggling to support a large family.

J. Q. Rogers has had to place a mortgage upon his little home to raise his part which can only be redeemed by self-sacrifice and denial and unless he shall meet with most favorable conditions, he stands a chance to lose his home and be turned into the world penniless.

The animus of the prosecution is what is most remarkable. The church people knew that Akin was insolvent and that his debt was no asset of the Mason estate; but in their desperate greed for the almighty dollar, they violated their obligation to Almighty God, and sought to create money out of nothing by taking it away from parties whom they knew to be entirely innocent. Has the church in this day and age descended to the religion of the highway robber and the thug? The Eugene church no doubt preaches the gospel of Christian mercy from its pulpit, but from its own practice and dealings even with its own church brethren, it appears to be a brute from which one is to expect as little mercy as milk from a male tiger!

Judge Wollerton, one of the supreme judges, who finally tried the case, although forced by the strict technicalities of the law to assent to the decision, is said to have declared there was no justice or equity in it. Yet the First U. B. church of Eugene, Oregon, is prosecutor of daylight robbery in which one of its own brethren is its victim! Surely nothing could be more calculated to bring religion down to contempt of every honest man and woman; and surely the sooner such religion is blotted from the face of the earth, the better it will be for civilization and the moral welfare of humanity. It is not to be understood that ALL churches nor ALL members of any particular church would be guilty of such gross fraud.

For the right, J. W. INGLE.
