BOARD DRAINS THAT LAST.

A Method of Construction Which Has Never Failed to Give Satisfactory Results.

When carefully laid with durable wood, a board drain is quickly made and it is very lasting. Of our northern wood oak and chestnut are the more durable. Rived boards of any wood last longer than those sawed. Chestnut and cypress rive easily, and the latter, when placed under the ground where wet all the time, is almost indestructible. The earth packs tightly about the boards, which receive no jars or shocks to make them crumble, and retains an open passage long after the fiber has decayed.

One method of construction is shown in Fig. a, where two boards about six inches wide are nailed together in a V shape and laid in the bottom as shown. If the boards are rived and there are many narrow strips among them, they may be nailed together as shown at b.

For either of these the ditch need not be over a spade wide on the bottom. The fall required for a board drain is greater than for round tile. It is well to estimate same on the basis of three inches per 100 feet of drain. The deeper the drain the farther it will draw. It is not considered, however, good policy to make unusually deep drains in stiff clay soils. In such soils the drain will not do its best at first, but will improve with years as the ground gradually becomes more porous. Two feet for stiff clays and three feet for light soils are good depths for work.

In laying board drains be careful to have them closely put together, covering any holes with small pieces of board to prevent the entrance of dirt. Cover the outlet with wire netting to keep out mice, rats, rabbits and other vermin. Take particular care to have the bottom of the ditch perfectly even and on the proper grade, otherwise it will wash out in some places and fill up in others.

Ditching grades can be easily secured by the use of the home-made instrument shown in the cut. To make it take a straight pine board six feet three inches long, as shown at c. Fix in the center and at right angles another board half as long. At the ends of the long arm fix sights, and from the center suspend a plumb bob with strong cord. This may be fastened to a Jacob's staff, or with a thumb screw that may be clamped in any position. When adjusted so that the cord indicates zero on the scale the sights on the long arm, c, will be on a level. The scale is divided into one-sixteenth-inch spaces. By moving cross-arm so that cord passes over one scale the line of sights will correspond to a grade of two inches to 100 feet, and when moved two spaces the sights will indicate a grade of four inches to 100 feet, and so on in proportion.—R. S. Mortimer, in Farm and Home.

SINGLE GERM BEET SEED.

An Improvement That Will Mean a Saving of $1,000,000 Annually to Our Farmers.

The experimental patch of single-germ beet seed which was grown on the Saratoga farm near Lehi, Utah, has been harvested. Prof. Townsend found that certain sugar-beet flowers had a tendency to develop seeds of fewer germs than others. Following this hint, he took the pollen of hundreds of these flowers and placed it in similar flowers of other beets and tied little paper bags over them till they ripened into seed. By this method he secured quite a number of seeds with but a single germ. These seeds he planted last year in Washington, and while they were growing into mother beets, he again pursued the paper-sack plan and gathered several thousand others of the single-germ variety, and sowed the beets grown last winter in Washington. This spring, owing to the eminent success attained by Utah in the production of sugar beets, the experiments were transferred to Utah, and the single-germ seed and beets produced from single-germ seed were planted. The closest attention was given to the beets, and there were no other seed beets grown within five miles, which insured them from receiving pollen which might be carried by insects from plants of multiple-germ seed. Later, experts will carefully examine the seed produced this year and will separate the single from the multiple-germ seed, and it is expected that from the beets which received special treatment 30 per cent. will prove to be of single germ. Prof. Townsend believes that beets produced from the seed grown this year will produce seed that will be more than 50 per cent. single-germ seed, and that ultimately he will get a species that will invariably produce but a single plant, and which will mean a saving to the American farmer of $1,000,000 annually.

Don't Feed Too Much Corn. Many a farmer has weakened the constitutions of his animals by feeding too heavily of corn. This feed makes fat, but when fed in too great abundance deprives the animal of vigor and lessens the breeding qualities.

See that there is sufficient shade in every pasture for the stock.

HEALTH

"I don't think we could keep house without Theodor's Black-Draught. We have used it in the family for over two years with the best of results. I have not had a doctor in the house for that length of time. It is a doctor in itself and always ready to make a person well and happy."—JAMES HALL, Jacksonville, Ill.

Because this great medicine relieves stomach pains, frees the constipated bowels and invigorates the torpid liver and weakens kidneys.

No Doctor

is necessary in the home where Theodor's Black-Draught is kept. Families living in the country, miles from any physician, have been kept in health for years with this medicine as their only doctor. Theodor's Black-Draught cures biliousness, dyspepsia, colds, chills and fever, bad blood, headaches, diarrhoea, constipation, colic and almost every other ailment because the stomach, bowels, liver and kidneys so nearly control the health.
