THE FARMER'S FRIEND.

The present, or Dingley tariff, has been misrepresented and inveighed against by the enemies of protection more than any similar law the country has ever had. This is not so much because of the high rates of duty it fixes, for these are lower on many commodities than under the tariff of 1883, but because it more intelligently embodies and applies the principle of protection. We never had a similar law which has been so equitably and intelligently applied to every American industry requiring any protection.

This is the most commendable feature of the law, the feature which has made it so beneficial and has so powerfully vindicated the doctrine of protection by tariff.

It is alleged that protection is of little or no benefit to the farmer, partly because he does not need it, but mainly because it compels him to buy commodities which he consumes but can not produce, from his own manufacturers at a much higher price than he would have to pay under conditions of free trade.

The farmer must sell the surplus of whatever he produces for consumption, in home markets or for exportation to foreign markets. There are few things which he produces that are not protected by the tariff. His surplus products are chiefly food supplies, articles necessary to human subsistence. If this is wheat, and he sells it for export, he is forced to sell in competition with the surplus wheat production of South America, India, and Australasia. Europe is the great consumer, and Liverpool fixes the price our farmer will receive for his wheat. It is the same with any other farm product. If it is sold for exportation it is sold in competition with the world's surplus production of the same commodity, and the price is fixed in foreign trade centers.

There is no farmer in Oregon engaged in diversified farming who does not know that the market for home consumption pays him better prices for his surplus productions than the markets of the world do. He may not just understand why it is so, but he knows it.

The reasons for it is that our internal commerce is twice as valuable as the international commerce of the world, and protection preserves this for our own producers.

The farmer may, confidently say "I do not care if all my products are put on the free list, so long as our mills and factories are kept running and our workmen are employed at good wages I can easily and profitably dispose of my surplus products right here at home."

The policy of protection encourages and benefits American manufactures, agriculture and home industries of all kinds, and promotes the general welfare.

The farmer, as well as the manufacturer and mechanic, needs to bear in mind that there is no issue between the Dingley tariff and any other tariff that might recognize the principle of protection. The Democratic platform denounces protection as robbery. Tariff revision as intended by that party means the ruin of protection. Farmers should not be deceived. The Dingley tariff has and is benefitting them. They are as much concerned in the maintenance of protection as any other class of men, whether it be those who are engaged in manufactures or those who earn their bread by the sweat of their face.

Protection is the farmer's friend.

WHY RETAINED.

It seems to be inseparable from our form of government that questions of abstract right and questions of political economy should be considered a party measure on which men might divide on party lines and discuss with partisan zeal and acerbity.

It is a slow, painful process to bring such questions out from a partisan environment up to their proper level where wise statesmanship may decide them. That party, therefore, which is led by statesmen rather than by mere politicians, will ultimately decide such questions and determine their value and place in the fixed policies of the nation.

The Republican party has been remarkably successful in settling such questions. Through the most prolonged and fierce conflict forced acquiescence to the truth that freedom is national; that we are a nation, not a confederation of states; that our national obligations in all things are to be sacredly kept; that the civil service of the government shall be kept from partisan control; that the improvement of rivers and harbors is a function of the government; that an isthmian canal shall be built at once; that gold shall be our standard of monetary value; these and many things have been decided despite partisan obstruction and negation. There remain yet many things to accomplish, many grave problems to solve. Patience, courage, abounding patriotism, experience and wisdom which cometh of these will bring the most difficult of these questions to a final solution.

If indeed it were true, as Judge Parker says of the gold standard, that questions once decided are "irrevocably fixed," we might contemplate partisan contests with equanimity. But it is not true. Nothing is so fixed nor can be, until all men learn and practice the precepts of wisdom.

"When our flag is put it must stay put," but the only way to keep it there is to place those who "put it," on guard. The people instinctively know this. They know that the grand things done for the country, for humanity itself, by the Republican party are not all yet beyond the power of partisan touch. They know that it is necessary to the stability of things done that vigilant care for them must be maintained.

For these reasons the party will be kept in control of the government.

There must be no faltering, no turning aside, no going back. Theodore Roosevelt is the American ideal of a leader and he will be retained at the head of their chosen party by the people of the country, to guard things done and to do yet greater things for the public weal.

A Question of Tacks.

Any reader of this paper, sending 25 cents in silver, by postal note or in one and two-cent stamps, will be sent the Daily Journal one month; or the Sunday Journal two months; or the Semi-Weekly Journal for three months, or the Weekly Journal four months, and in addition a match safe filled with tacks, postage prepaid. Not Sick a Day Since.

I was taken severely sick with kidney trouble. I tried all sorts of medicines, none of which relieved me. One day I saw an ad. of your electric Bitters and I determined to try that! After taking a few doses I felt relieved, and soon thereafter was entirely cured, and have not seen a sick day since. Neighbors of mine have been cured of Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Liver and Kidney troubles and General Debility. This is what B. F. Bass, of Fremont, N. C. writes. A marriage license was issued yesterday to Clare C. Woodworth of Portland and Miss Mary E. Elliott, who lives four miles north of Corvallis.

U. S. Senator John H. Mitchell will present the issues now before the American people, to the people of Marion county at Salem, next Tuesday evening. A large attendance is anticipated.

The building that did good service during the summer as a city pest house has been rented from the owner, Mr. Mann, and is now occupied by Chas. Wiley and family. The furniture used by the summer boarders which had been taken to the city bastille was purchased by Mr. Wiley and taken back to his new domicile.

We learn with sadness that the physician and friends of Miss Sue McDonald of Philomath, who is lying very low with consumption, have no hope of her recovery. Until recently it was thought she recover. She is a very estimable young lady and has a wide circle of kind and sympathetic friends.

For a comedy that ranks with the best—for acting by an excellent company—for an evening at the prettiest theatre in Portland, go to the Columbia and see "In Mizoura"—a comedy made famous by Nat Goodwin, and put on at the Columbia in a style that cannot be surpassed. All Benton county people spend their evenings when in Portland at this famous resort.

A YOUNG MAN WISHING TO LEARN business along educational lines, who is steady, industrious, temperate, genial, polite, discreet in talk and actions and who spends his spare time at home and in proper company, may address, P. O. Box 1045, Corvallis, Or.
