

THINGS MADE POSSIBLE.

The overwhelming republican victory of Tuesday not only expresses the satisfaction of the American people with the principles of the republican party and the fruits of republican policies, is not only an expression of confidence in Theodore Roosevelt and his administration of public affairs, but it means more than these things.

It means that the things which have been already accomplished must not be undone. Judge Parker and the democratic party may now accept his words, "the gold standard is irrevocably fixed," at their full face value, not simply with reference to the monetary standard but also with reference to the principle of American Protection.

There was nothing better understood by the people than that democratic success meant the destruction of protection.

An analysis of the vote cast shows that the people will not consent to the abandonment of protection. No party opposed to that principle can hope to gain control of the government. We may now hope to see it taken out of the domain of partisan politics and given its proper place and treatment as a question of economics. This will be of incalculable benefit to the business of the country and to the material interests of every wage-worker.

The victory insures a well sustained and energetic effort to build the Panama canal. The party and the President having made an auspicious beginning of this work will be permitted to push it forward. It is not presumptuous to believe that it will be driven forward with such fiery energy that it will be completed in the shortest time possible. The President has every incentive to spur him on to complete it within his term of office. The people and the world of commerce desire its early completion. Congress will do all needful for its construction in the least possible time. Economy of expenditure demands that continuous and energetic efforts be put forth to prosecute the work until finished. Every condition is auspicious for prosecuting the great work speedily and successfully.

The President is a young man in full vigor of life. He believes in doing things and he does them. Once satisfied of his duty he acts with tireless energy to accomplish his purpose. He doubtless realizes that the completion of this work would perpetuate his name and be a monument to his administration more enduring than the pyramids are to the fame of the Pharaohs.

All these things are now made possible, and whether wrought out quickly or more slowly the American people have declared there shall be no turning away from them.

REQUIRES PUBLIC SENTIMENT.

By a majority of votes for prohibition saloons can have no legal existence in Benton county from the first of next January. For the first time in its history the county will have a sumptuary law. The friends of temperance, those who honestly deplore the pernicious influences of the saloon business, those who are unqualifiedly opposed to the liquor influence in our politics, or enough of them, at least, have joined hands with a few thick-and-thin prohibitionists and voted to banish the saloons from the county.

If this is really done, if the prohibitory law is rigidly enforced, it is quite certain to win the confidence and support of both temperate and temperance men who are now very dubious of the practicability of its enforcement.

The question yet remains can it, will it be enforced. No law of human enactment can or does enforce itself. It is no matter how perfect and beneficent a law may be, nor how complete the machinery for its operation may be constructed, it must have back of it a solidified, earnest public sentiment demanding its enforcement. This is emphatically true of all sumptuary laws. Men claim the inherent right to eat and to drink what they will. They may do both irrationally and their fellows may hold them in contempt or at most but pity them, for they claim the inherent right of a man to embroilize himself if he choose to do so.

Such laws for their enforcement require that men shall become spies upon the private life and affairs of their neighbors, — a work from which every high-minded man turns away with loathing.

Besides all this no party is responsible for the enactment of prohibition. The democratic party is not; no more is the republican party, and surely the 123 devoted prohibitionists are not to be held responsible. Since Americans are accustomed to act through the medium of party, the party of the majority is held for the enactment and enforcement of laws. But here is a law enacted by no party, and it may be regarded as filius nullus—the offspring of no one.

We know that the temperance-drunken, thick-and-thin prohibitionists will be the first and loudest to cry out in condemnation of republicans if the law fail of enforcement, public sentiment nilly-willy. More than this. If republicans should ever need to solicit prohibition aid they will be told to go to. This party of one idea, one purpose, that is to make men good by law, has not now and never did have anything but misrepresentation and abuse for republicans who fail to accept prohibition,—not temperance—but intemperate prohibition as the only question worthy of thought.

We hope the law may be enforced, because dead-letter, laws beget in the young disrespect for all law, an evil greater than the liquor traffic, but we do not expect to find that prohibition has solved the liquor question.

"Well Nigh Perfect."

Many flattering press notices of the Georgia Harper Company are furnished by her advance agent, and among them the one below from The Dalles Chronicle of November 2, will give Corvallis theatre-goers some idea of what they may expect next week. It says:

Few plays have greater demand on the principle players of the cast than does "Camille," and a company that presents it as did Georgia Harper and her support last night, is deserving of a place among the best actors of the day.

Upon its former presentation by the same company we were unstinted in our praise of Miss Harper's conception of the very exacting role. We are now ready to reiterate our statements made at that time and to add more, for to say nothing of the acceptable manner in which the previous acts were given, her work in the last two were well nigh perfect, though that is saying much. Her every move and expression was such as compelled the audience to see the suffering of "Camille" and to forget Miss Harper. We are ready to make amends for the slight criticism concerning Mr. Detrick, who assumed the role of "Armand" last night and was "Armand" last night. No one, not even the exacting reporter, could have accused him of sleepiness last night. He was indeed wide awake to every opportunity and did some fine acting. His facial expression, particularly his cynical smile, was especially appropos of the character. Their support met the limited requirements the play demands of them acceptably, and we here venture to make favorable comment on the natural acting of the maid, whose role, though it seems minor, yet has required good stage presence in both plays. The dancing specialties given between acts are far above the average, and the orchestra music good.

At 10 o'clock Wednesday morning at the beautiful home of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Wyatt two miles west of town occurred the marriage of their daughter, Miss Minnie Wyatt, to William J. Junkins, of Portland. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Edward F. Green, of the Congregational church, in the presence of about 20 invited relatives and guests. The bride and groom were unattended, she being clad in a beautiful costume of pink and white and carrying a brides bouquet of the same colors, the groom was clad in conventional black. The decorations of the room were pink and white chrysanthemums. The wedding march was played by Mrs. Edward F. Green. The bride's bouquet was caught by Miss Janie Newton which according to a very pretty sentiment signifies that she will be the first of the bride's lady friends to be married. After the ceremony a sumptuous wedding breakfast was served by the hostess of the occasion. Mr. Junkins is a former OAC student and Miss Elliott is the highly esteemed daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Wyatt who are among the most prominent of Benton county citizens. Mr. and Mrs. Junkins left Wednesday for Portland where they will make their home.

There will be the regular services at the Christian church Sunday morning. In the evening the pastor will speak upon the subject, "The Boyhood and Early Manhood of Jesus." At the close of the service four young men will be baptized.

Congregational church—Sunday school and class for young men at 10:00, regular service at 11:00 a. m., Christian Endeavor at 6:30 p. m., evening service at 7:30. Morning sermon, "The Brother, the Sister, the Mother of Christ, Who are They?" Evening sermon, "Heaven, Possibility, When? What?"
