JUST LIKE BELLAMY.

It is said that "Where there's a will there's a way." Since childhood the truth of this old saw has been drummed into our ears until at times we half believed it to be true. Sometimes we have hoped it might be so, and again it has been our fervent prayer that nothing might prove farther from the truth than this "dog-eared" saying.

In Sunday's Oregonian appeared a vapory editorial in which it was vaguely hinted that it might be the part of wisdom to have all the institutions of learning in the state removed to Portland. A portion of the article reads as follows:

Suppose some experimental angel, with a broom big enough, were to fly over Oregon and sweep together on one campus, in Portland, for example, the State University, the Agricultural College, the four State Normal Schools, the State Medical School and the state law school! He would be a bold angel without expectation of future favors from the Legislature, but would he not be beneficent? Think of the economies which would result to the taxpayers of the state, a sordid thought, of course, but an insistent one. One plant instead of many; one set of buildings; one outfit of libraries, laboratories, furniture and professors; one array of buildings; one parcel of land; one administrative force; one board of regents; one budget of incidentals.

Is this intended seriously? If so, who is the genius that conceived this wonderful(?) idea? And yet, on record thought, it is not surprising that such an idea should originate in a Portland cranium. It has not taken a close observer to note that instead of fostering and encouraging the development of various enterprises of the state outside of Portland, it has been a policy of many years' standing for the people of the metropolis to discourage and kill country industries and institutions.

So far as our college, OAC, is concerned, there is not a particle of fear that the Oregonian's big broom angel will ever sweep it to Portland. Our legislators are not all fools. But the spirit of the writer of the article referred to is a selfish one. Either that, or he is ill-informed. It is patent that he knows little of conditions here, or else has lost a sense of the fitness of things.

No place in the state can there be found a more beautiful site for a college; there is no location more healthful, nor is living cheaper anywhere in the state of Oregon. But this is not all. The various distractions of a large city are not conducive to study, and the majority of parents sending their children to college do so with the expectation that they will make the best of their opportunities while there. In the larger cities there are too many pitfalls for ensnaring youth, and parents are aware of this and guard against it.

Will our metropolitan editorial writer's dream come true? There is no danger. The hundreds of thousands of dollars already invested here are a guaranty against it, even though other conditions were not so perfectly satisfactory to the people of the state as they are. Black angels and pitchforks could not turn the trick.

A Warning.

We are in receipt of a letter from Miss Carrie A. Holbrook, secretary of the Portland Traveler's Aid Association. The following portion of her letter makes clear her motive in writing:

There will be held in Portland, Oregon, from the first of June to the fifteenth of October, the Lewis and Clark Exposition, and it is the special endeavor of the the Portland Traveler's Aid Association "affiliated with the name of Exposition T. A. Committee," to sound a note of warning to girls and young women throughout the United States coming to see the Exposition with the idea of getting work. We are daily in receipt of numerous inquiries from many of the girls from such business houses as Wannamaker's in New York City, and Marshal Field's in Chicago, looking to the securing of work here. Here in Portland the supply already exceeds the demand and unless the knowledge of this fact can be spread broadcast throughout the United States the result will be far beyond our capabilities to handle.

Most of the inquiries received advise us that the writer has saved money enough to reach here, but must have immediate employment upon her arrival. Longing to see the sights of the Exposition, reduced railroad fares and the added assurance of employment form a firm irresistible attraction to the working girl in the East, who wishes for this sort of vacation. In spite of repeated warnings, the conditions at St Louis last year was simply appalling, and it is the imperative thought of the Organization that something in the way of a preventative be done.

After Prizes.

That our county to the west is after some benefit from the Exposition is evidenced by the following from the Oregonian:

Lincoln county is coming to the Exposition with a view of taking back all the prizes in sight for county competition. C. M. Brown, County Judge of Lincoln County, has arrived at the Exposition grounds to make full arrangements for a complete display of the resources of his section. He states that the people of Lincoln County feel that they have the best part of the state and they intend to convince the rest of the world that their possibilities are unequalled.

"In our exhibit," said Judge Brown yesterday, "we are going to bring timber, stone, minerals, fish and game, oysters and everything that is profitable. When we have everything that is lying around loose up here we are going to take pictures of what we can't transport. I'm sorry we can't bring our climate along with the rest. Everyone then would want to flock to Lincoln county."

The same spirit is shown by all county representatives who are now paying frequent visits to the Exposition grounds, and the result will be close competition with each county putting its best foot forward. Plans for county booths and exhibits are being carefully concealed, as each contains some new and novel idea to spring, and by which it is hoped to land cash awards and honorable mention from the jury of awards. Twenty-four Oregon counties are participating and the Exposition boards of each are hard at work on the final details of their work.
