TALE OF THE ALBATROSS.

Interesting Nomadic Bird Has a Unique Superstition Attached to Its Life.

Of all the strange creatures seen by travelers not the least interesting is the wandering albatross. This great feathered wanderer, sometimes measuring 17 feet from tip to tip of his wings, will follow a ship for days at a time. Some travelers and sailors declare that they have seen a particular bird fly for weeks at a time without resting. The albatross has always been a bird of mystery, and in ancient times the people believed that these unwearied seabirds were the companions of the Greek warrior Diomedes, who were said to have been changed into birds at the death of their chief.

Though the superstition about the killing of an albatross bringing bad luck is only a foolish one, it has served a useful purpose for many years in preventing the slaughter of these beautiful and gallant birds—the sailors' friends and the landmen's wonder. Up in dreary Kamtchatka, that outlying part of Siberia which cuts into the North Pacific, the natives, never having heard of the superstition about the albatross, catch him and eat him. But his flesh makes such poor food that, after all, the legend may be said to hold good, for he is indeed in bad luck who has to make a meal of it.

GREAT RETINUES OF HELP.

Millionaires' Servants Are Themselves Waited On, So Vast Is the Household System.

So huge are the establishments maintained by some of the greatest millionaires of to-day that in some cases the very servants are in their turn waited on by those of a lower grade. The head servants in these palatial homes live far better than many a well-to-do citizen who would think service of any kind a degradation.

In some great households the servants' quarters are as well arranged as those of the master and mistress. Each of the head servants has a separate room luxuriously furnished. In at least one instance, a housekeeper has her own suite, including a bathroom, fitted in marble, and with silver-plated fittings.

In establishments of this kind there may be from 20 to 40 servants, of whom at least ten will be concerned in the preparation of the simplest meal for the master and mistress.

To the upper servants in such houses the bare notion of preparing their own meals, or doing any of the domestic work attaching to their own apartments, would be as repulsive as the idea of carrying the meals was to the footman in "Blackwick Papers."

SPOT AMERICANS ABROAD.

Tourists from United States Can Be Told by Hair and Beards, Says One Who Knows.

"Abroad," said an Englishman, "I have no difficulty in telling Americans. I tell the women by their hair and the men by their beards."

"English women wear their hair very much dressed, and about the ears and the nape of the neck it falls in a strange way, like a wig. An English woman's hair looks more or less consciously, to look so, for a certain royal lady wears wigs altogether.

"American women's hair is dressed simply. It is drawn from the nape in a clean manner. It never seems to be artificially curled. It never seems to be pulled out with artificial wadding of any kind. It is just a soft, simple, prettiness of hair, and it suffices to distinguish the American woman anywhere.

"I tell American men by their smooth-shaven faces. An Englishman always wears a mustache, and the continental wears either a moustache or a beard. Thus, the American, with his face as beardless as a priest's, is readily picked out."

GIRLS WEAR TROUSERS.

Circassian Maids and Damsels Enjoy Unique Schedule of Men's Apparel—Have Three Colors.

"Ever been to Circassia?" said the sailor.

"No, of course not," the druggist answered.

"Then I'll tell you about the trousers of the Circassian girls. Jimme," said the temperate sailor, "a mock cocktail. I'll tell you about them trousers while you're mixin' up the drink."

"In Circassia, Cad, the girls is all beautiful. They have straight noses, clear eyes, white teeth and heavy hair. They are slim, and they wear bright cloths—red shoes, flowin' veils, sashes, trousers. Their trousers is what I am goin' to tell you about."

"Only three colors in trousers is worn—red, white and blue."

"Supposin', in Circassia, you saw a girl walkin' in front of you in white trousers. If you was a single man the thing for you to do then would be to get ahead of her and, lookin' back, size her up. If you liked her looks, you might speak to her in a respectful way—ask her to take a sherbet, for instance. She wouldn't be offended. Why not? Because, wearin' white, she'd be a single girl. White trousers is only worn by the unmarried in Circassia."

"If you saw, glidin' along in red trousers, the most beautiful girl in the world, you'd have no right to speak to her, no matter how much her loveliness might attract you. Red trousers is a sign the girl is married. Red—danger—hands off."

"Blue trousers, again, is all right. If your Circassian girl has blue trousers on, step up to her as free as you please; tell her she is lookin' well, and ask her if she won't take supper with you. She'll not be offended if you are respectful and polite. Her blue trousers shows she is a widow."

"Circassia, Cad, is the place for a single man to go that is fond of the ladies. He can't make no mistakes there, whereas here, jiminy!"

ALLIGATORS IN VENEZUELA.

There Are Thousands of Them There, But as Yet They Are of No Practical Use.

The United States consul at Maracaibo, Venezuela, in a recent report to the state department comments interestingly on the great number of alligators in that country. He viewed these hideous amphibians through a business eye and wrote:

"Though but few alligator skins are sent abroad from here, it is not on account of scarcity of alligators. It is strange that nobody has taken up the hinting of these reptiles. They are here in the lakes and lagoons and rivers in untold numbers and all sizes. The skins are well worth securing and alligator oil brings a high price, being used for medicinal purposes. In the Rio de Oro and the Rio Tarra I have seen thousands of large alligators which came up to deposit their eggs on the sand banks during the dry season. It is the same in all the hundreds of streams which flow into the lake of Maracaibo. Alligator hunting is fine sport, and in my opinion would be a paying business."

Oil on Troubled Land.

Oil is not only poured on the troubled waters but also on agitated terra firma. Some 3,000 miles of the roadways of California are now treated with oil for the purpose of laying dust. The results are said to be most promising, partly because of the peculiar climatic conditions in southern California. The climate is so dry that the difficulty has always been to prevent the road surface from loosening, since there is not sufficient moisture to bind the road materials. The oil used has an asphalt base and differs in this regard from the crude oil available elsewhere.

TOLSTOI UNABLE TO REPLY

Famous Russian Found Himself at a Loss When Confronted by the Officer's Argument.

Once, in Moscow, near the Borovitchskaya gate, says Success, Count Tolstoi saw a persistent beggar asking alms, who exclaimed: "A little penny, brother, in the name of Christ!"

A police officer approached; he was young, martial, and wrapped in the regulation sheepskin. At sight of him the beggar fled, hobbling away in fright and haste.

"Is it possible," said Tolstoi to himself, "that people are forbidden to ask charity, in Christ's name—in a Christian land?"

"Brother," he said to the policeman "can you read?"

"Yes," said the officer, politely, for Tolstoi has a grand air.

"Have you a Bible?"

"Yes."
"And do you remember Christ's order to feed the hungry?"—and he cited the words. The policeman was evidently troubled; he turned to his questioner and asked:

"And you, sir—can you read?"
"Yes, brother."
"And have you read the police regulations?"

"Yes, brother."
"And do you remember that begging in the main streets is forbidden?" The prophet found no answer ready.
