POLLY PORTER'S MEMORY.

A Parrot Who Never Forgot What He Once Had Learned or Heard.

Perhaps all parrots have equally remarkable memories, but 25 years' acquaintance with "Polly Porter" enables me to say that he never forgets what he has once learned, asserts Mary Rice Miller, in St. Nicholas. Like other parrots, when he is alone he exercises his memory as if amusing himself. Then it is that Polly Porter chatters in sentences; laughs aloud hysterically; calls, in various tones, commanding or beseechingly; calls the names of servants who, but for Polly, would have been forgotten; calls the cat; whistles for dogs who were about him years ago.

Polly's cage is in a bow window of the dining-room—a good place for keeping an eye on the family. When the father rises from the breakfast table Polly advises: "Hurry! Hurry up! Hurry!"

Later, with the first movement preparatory to the children's start for school, he repeats sharply: "Hurry up! Hurry up! Hurry!"

When a guest comes in he says, briskly: "Why, how d'yedo?"

When he calls "Good-by" to persons passing on the street it seems almost certain that he reasons about the coming and departing guest. He quickly notices little children; coming to one particular corner of the bottom of his cage, he flutters before a little one, attempting baby talk, which is very funny, ending with "Beautiful child! Beautiful child!" and a loud laugh.

When the house is quiet and his mistress has a visitor in the parlor Polly craves attention.

Herepeats the children's names, most as if he were calling the roll in sweet, low tones. Then he says: "Mamma!" over and over, a child's voice, till it is common for a visitor to say: "Do answer that child," or "Some one is calling you." He comes very near to telling tales, saying: "Ah, ah! naughty boy!" with great severity.

Polly is most impatient at breakfast time, when he shrieks: "I he receives attention: "Polly wants coffee! Polly wants breakfast!"

He takes a piece of bread cautiously; examines it; if it is not all buttered he throws it down. He enjoys a bunch of grapes, holding it down with one claw while with the other and his beak he opens grape after grape, eats the seed and casts the pulp away. He busily crushes a pear or an apple to get at the seeds.

Last Christmas Polly was sent by his owner, a New York boy, to friends as a present. They were old of his liveliness and astonishing powers of speech.

For some months Polly moped and said nothing, but at last began calling members of the family by name. If let out of his cage he caught the pug and whipped the cat; when shut up in his cage for punishment he would persistently work at the wires till he would force them apart and walk out defiantly. Recently he began upon his old lessons, and now repeats the cries of the newsboys in the streets: "Extrah! Extrah! Journal—Sun—Herald!" And he sings quite well "Yankee Doodle," which was taught him last summer.

Good-by, Polly!

FROM CHICAGO.

S. L. Kline Writes From Palmer House.

We are in receipt of a note from S. L. Kline, who, in company with his wife, was registered at the Palmer House in Chicago. Very soon they are to be in San Francisco, from which place they expect to come home about October 15. After sending regards to friends in Corvallis, Mr. Kline drew attention to an article on wheat which appeared in the S. F. Chronicle not long ago and suggested the wisdom of a reprint of such portions as would be of interest to our wheat raisers. Believing the article to be of unusual interest, we take pleasure in reprinting it entire, as follows:

The steady decline in the volume and gluten content of the California wheat crop is a very serious matter to those who have capital invested either in ranches, which, without irrigation, can only be devoted to grain; warehouses for storing the crops, steamers and barges for transporting it, and mills for grinding it, and during the last year all these interests have united, in assisting to defray the expense of a thorough investigation of the causes of the decrease in yield per acre and in the quality of the product. Professor G. W. Shaw of the State University has been in charge of one part of the investigation, but the matter has engaged the attention of several of the departments of the agricultural college, of the grain experts of the United States department of Agriculture and of many of our farmers and millers. That the falling off in our wheat product is to a great extent due to the deterioration of soil resulting from long continued one crop farming, was, of course, recognized, as was also the fact that our climate tends to the production of starchy, rather than glutenous wheat.

For increasing the yield various plans are under consideration, notably irrigation, in which some experiments have been made. Our grain growers, however, are not irrigators and our expert irrigators mostly live where water is too costly to be applied to grain crops. The opposite method of intensive dry cultivation by what is popularly known as the "Campbell method" has also been talked about, but without trial, in this State, so far as we are aware. Improvement in these directions will require time. But there is one way by which both yield and quality can be improved at once, and that is by procuring new seed of glutenous varieties successfully grown elsewhere, and found by trial to do well in this state. A good many varieties have been tested during the past season and several have been found which are quite satisfactory. The variety, however, which yields best in this state, carries a large gluten content, and of which seed can be obtained in commercial quantities, is the Turkish red, which is extensively grown in Nebraska and Kansas, with blue-stem, from Eastern Washington, as a second choice. The consensus of opinion seems to favor Turkish red, and a good deal of seed is being imported by millers and dealers. It has not rusted to any considerable extent, does not shell or break off, yields well, and is satisfactory to millers. As grain suitable for seed and free from noxious weed seed requires time and care for selection and importation, it is considered important that all grain growers place their orders early in order to assure the importation of a sufficient quantity of the proper quality.

Reduction in Rates.

September 1, the round trip fare to Portland, account Exposition, will be reduced from $3.50 to $2.90 for a thirty day ticket but not good after October 31st. This is a voluntary reduction made by the S. P. R. R. and will be appreciated by the public as the last six weeks of the Fair will be the best part and see the largest crowd.
