PUBLIC SPIRIT.

There is an old adage that "money makes the mare go." This is taken to mean that any conceivable enterprise can be made a success provided there is enough money backing it. Money is a power. Many most desirable enterprises could never be carried to ultimate success without the aid of money and oftentimes the expenditure of large sums of it. Large numbers of men, indeed, seem to believe that nothing worth while may be accomplished by any other means than the application of money and plenty of it. Such men have lost sight of the fact there is something more potent than money; something, too, which never fails to accomplish whatever it undertakes. It has the happy faculty of making "the mare go" to good purpose even though large sums of money are not available.

This power is known as public spirit, or the manifestation of life, activity and energy making for common use and public benefit. Like charity, this spirit may begin its activity at home. A man having it will have his buildings, his farm, his fences, and everything pertaining to his domicile neat, clean and attractive. This done he sees something he can easily do not only for his own benefit but for that of the public at large. It may be only mending a near by piece of bad road. Whatever it is he goes at it heartily and cheerily, and does it. There is nothing that can be done for the common good which he does not stand ready to help along.

This public spirit resembles the smallpox in that it is exceedingly contagious. Who has not seen whole neighborhoods transformed because the spirit had seized upon one man and set him to work?

This spirit makes for economy, for it invariably accomplishes more, in shorter time and with less expenditure of money than can be compassed without it. Fortunate is the community which has one or two public spirited citizens dwelling in it. Most fortunate that community in which all its members are public spirited citizens.

Corvallis is waking up and moving forward, but her citizens—some of them at least—should exhibit yet more of that admirable quality of good citizenship known among men as public spirit.

AN EQUAL VOICE.

Secretary Taft in a recent speech to a southern audience reminded republicans that although their state always went democratic, by decisive majorities, at presidential elections, they had as great strength, or as many votes in the National Republican Convention as those states which gave equally as decisive republican majorities.

This has been the case for many years. It is not just to the republicans of those states who make the election of a republican president possible that other states which contribute nothing to party success have as much to say concerning the selection of candidates and the promulgation of party purposes.

It has been suggested that the delegates to the National convention from each state should be in the ratio that its vote bears to the republican vote of all the states. Nothing has been done, and as it is merely a party question it is of comparatively little moment.

A far more important matter is that of excessive representation in congress and hence in the electoral college of those states which have disfranchised the negro yet count him present when it comes to fixing their representation in congress. Here are several wrongs of National importance. A plain provision of the federal constitution is practically annulled. This gives one section of the country a greater representation in the national congress than it is lawfully entitled to, and it inures to the advantage of one political party.

Nothing has been done to remedy these wrongs. It is not probable anything will be done. But unless the South shows a decided purpose to divide on national issues between the several parties, as in the North the time will come when something must be done to extirpate these wrongs.

Senator Fulton's speech Friday, at the court house was in his best vein. He said nothing showing himself to be out of harmony with the administration or with the purpose of the party. Upon several questions which have not yet come up for party action he gave such expression of personal opinion as entitles him to a place with the most advanced thinkers on these subjects.

Governor Chamberlain's Address.

Governor Geo. Chamberlain's speech at the court house grounds Thursday afternoon at the big All-Benton fair was of a practical nature and appropriate to the occasion. It was the first time that many of those in the large audience had ever seen or heard the governor and the occasion was one long to be remembered by them.

In his reference to the public schools the governor won hearty applause for insisting that they be not employed entirely to fit boys and girls for the so-called higher education, but more for practical affairs of life, such as agriculture, horticulture, domestic science, etc. If more boys learned grafting trees there would be less grafting of fees. If more girls learned to cook there would be fewer divorce suits filed.

Additional Local.

Prof and Mrs. Will Wicks leave tomorrow for New York City. After a two weeks visit there with relatives Prof. Wicks enters Cornell for a course.

All winners of prizes in the Benton school fair can obtain their certificates of award at the store of A. K. Ross. They will then be able to secure their prizes. All are requested to call and secure these certificates which are now ready.

Rev. Yates left Saturday afternoon accompanied by Mrs. Yates for Roseburg where he has accepted a position as stenographer in the office of the dispatcher for the Southern Pacific. Mr. Yates has been in Albany for the past few months in the employ of the Linn county Abstract Company. His many friends here wish him success in his new location.—Herald.

Every boy, no matter how rich or how poor his ancestry, should learn thoroughly some good trade, so that if his circumstances become reversed at any time he could immediately do service at his trade and start again on a successful road to prosperity. The printing trade is not only artistic when completely learned, but it is also highly educational in every particular, and one of the best trades that anyone can learn, as opportunity for labor is ever ready each working day in the year.

There is one of the best opportunities in all the land for a young man of steady habits, good principles, well educated, having a will to work and excel, to learn the printing trade in the Gazette office. Proper explanation will be given on application. 674

Male and Female Guineas.
Authorities on guinea raising claim that it is always best, no matter how small a flock you may have, to have two or more males running with the hens. As a rule one cock guinea is enough for every four hens, but sometimes the birds will pair. Some breeders claim that it is best to breed them in pairs. There is only one absolutely certain way of telling the male from the female and that is by the call or cry. The female has a peculiar call which is never uttered by the male and resembles "Backheat" or "Come Back." The call of the male is a shrill, rasping scream.
