BE THOROUGH.

As the etymology of the word signifies, education is a leading out from, a development. This is a continuous process, never ceasing in its operation. "Never too old to learn" is an adage which rests on the fact that education is constantly progressive and that no one can acquire possession of the aggregate or sum total of human knowledge. Whoever knew a man who knew all about everything? It is equally certain that no one man ever gained all knowledge possible concerning any one thing. However, learned a man may become he may never say "ne plus ultra," for he well knows that deeper down than he has yet digged, further along than he has yet traveled are concealed great stores of knowledge. He may dig to greater depths, travel greater distance, then lie down and die conscious that some other man will come after him and discover principles and truths more profound than he himself had ever dreamed of.

The field of human knowledge is illimitable. It ever reaches out into the infinite. But the knowledge which may be gained by any one has its limitations. The most learned men realize how little the sum of their knowledge, and how imperfect, in the light of to-morrow, it may appear.

It is wisely ordained that he who would attain to any considerable knowledge must do so mainly through his own unceasing efforts. Books, schools, instructors are adventitious aids not to be lightly valued. Fortunately the young man to whom these are available and who uses them wisely and well, but it still remains true that his education is his own work. The most, the best perhaps that schools and teachers can do is to teach the use of the tools or instruments necessary in gaining an education, place them in the youth's hands, open wide the doors of "The Temple of Knowledge" and bid him enter.

Corvallis offers unusual opportunities to the young of either sex to obtain a desirable scholastic training, and we hope that an increased number of young men and women will enter the Agricultural college here. Every line of human endeavor is calling more and more insistently for educated men or women to "come and help."

Whatever vocation a young man or a young woman may choose, whether chopping wood or guiding the ship of state; whether washing dishes or leading a great moral reform, it will be better done and be conducive of greater happiness when directed by right education, for it is this element which ennobles both the doer and the thing done.

Let the young man be industrious, energetic, alert, observant and thoughtful; but above all else he must be thorough. He must make his knowledge part of his own consciousness.

Erasmus said, "not how much but how well." Scorn to be a smatterer. The world already has too many such. Know things, then you may do things; but remember—"It is better not to know so much as to know so many things that are not true." Dig, dig, dig, early and late, but ever dig for the truth.

MUST REMAIN SO.

The latest statement from Mr. Bryan is that he does not know what the real issue may be in the approaching presidential contest.

He says it is too early to see what it will be. Mr. Hearst has been no more successful in finding a real issue. The conservative democrats in all the northern states, especially in New York, seem to be more concerned at present how both Bryanism and Hearstism may be eliminated from the democratic party and the strength of their devotees utilized by the party. They find no issue in New York upon which they can hope to carry the state. In the last election for governor, Hughes, a republican, was elected over W. R. Hearst who put forth his utmost efforts to secure the election of himself. Of all those on the Hearst ticket who were then elected there seems to be none having the qualifications for larger things. Nearly all have failed to "make good" and could not be elected to succeed themselves. The administration of Governor Hughes has been wise, successful and highly satisfactory to all except the long time "bosses" of all parties. The governor has wholly ignored them and by doing so has greatly strengthened himself with the masses. So courageously and wisely has he performed his duties and wielded his power as executive of the state that the democratic leaders can find no issue on which they may hope to carry the state, nor can they hope to impair the governor's popularity. The democratic party in New York is really in bad shape because unable to find either man or issue with which it may hope to win.

The reason for this is that the people are satisfied with the administration of public affairs as conducted by the republican party. Its principles and policies cover the whole field and so wisely have these been applied and so beneficent have been the results that the people are satisfied. The party is enough conservative to be "safe and sane," enough progressive easily and quickly to conform its methods to the necessities arising from our changed and changing social and industrial conditions. Clinging tenaciously to its principles, consistently pursuing its comprehensive policies it has yet retained that element of flexibility which makes it the most desirable and efficient instrument in reach of the people for conducting the affairs of their government.

It is no easy task for the democratic party to find an issue for the republican party leaves none lying around loose, so it was compelled, long ago, to become the party of obstruction and negation. It has played at these so long a time and so devotedly, that it has lost all the power of constructive statesmanship it ever possessed. It has discredited itself with the people, and is thoroughly distrusted. When it purges itself and cleanses itself from the taint of Bryanism and Hearstism and finds a real issue it may regain some of its lost public confidence, but until then it must remain the party of obstruction and negation.

GOOD WILL RESULT.

It is not probable any international complications will grow out of the race riots occurring at Vancouver a few days since. Japan will now, most likely recognize the wisdom of making treaties with both Great Britain and the United States whereby Japanese coolie immigration to these countries shall not be partially restricted but absolutely prohibited.

"It is a consummation devoutly to be wished." Much as we need laborers in the Northwest the Japanese have already proved that they are not the sort of men to fill the requirements of our need of labor. They are not industrious, not truthful, not teachable, not reliable and not at all desirable as farm hands. Such, at least, is the verdict of Oregon farmers who have given them fair trial.

Compared with the Japs the Chinese seem to be more desirable. But we have found good reasons for prohibiting Chinese coolie immigration and now should certainly prohibit the coming of a less desirable people.

Our immigration laws might well exclude others as well as the Chinese and Japs. We are permitting a large influx of the most undesirable peoples on earth. We never can Americanize them. It is with great danger to our social and political institutions that we undertake to transform such human cattle into American citizens. Better let our demand for labor go unsatisfied than attempt to meet it by importations from such sources.

Good sometimes is wrought by evil. Riot, arson, rapine, murder are unmitigated evils and must be sternly repressed. But if restriction grows out of these disturbances we shall hail it as great good.

After reading this issue of the Gazette, send it to your friend in the distance; or better yet, call at the office and send it to your friend or relative for six months or a year, for you can expect just such a paper as this for fifty-two weeks during the next year. Throw in your mite toward placing our city and county where they belong upon the map. This paper will do its part; you do yours.

Saturday will be Children's Day at the State Fair. The "kids" will be admitted free, and will be royally entertained. This last day of the fair will be an important one. Many people erroneously consider Saturday inferior to the other days, when instead it should be the climax of the whole week. Special races will be contested on Lone Oak track.

Dr. F. H. Taylor and John Kiger left yesterday for the mountains where they expect to hunt elk. It is rumored that they hired one of the college cannon for long range work and that several barrels were also secreted in their camp outfit, in which to "salt down" all the elk they do not devour. No one knows where the vent nor how long they expect to be gone.

There is to be a "time" Tuesday at the I. O. O. F. hall. Four candidates are to be initiated in the third degree and the evening will conclude with a banquet.

Misses Davis and Mand Gregory visited friends at Philomath a few days last week. They drove over, and while in that vicinity their driving mare got frightened at an automobile and tipped the buggy over, throwing out the girls, and then ran away, breaking up the harness and buggy pretty badly. There were five men in the automobile, but they didn't even stop to see how much damage had been done. A farmer can hit the mare and patched things up for them so they could get to Philomath.—Lebanon Express-Advance. These automobilists must have been non-residents. Benton county chancellors are gentlemen, everyone, and have never yet been known to fail to act as such whenever any horse has been frightened by their machines.

In the estate of James P. McBee, deceased, the appraisers appointed to set aside the widow's dower in the estate have made their report and Judge Woodward has issued an order confirming the work done. The appraisers are Jerry Henkle, A. J. Johnson and Samuel Wyatt, and they give to the widow, Iva Mae McBee, as her dower, 1649 acres of land, southwest of Corvallis.

The colonist rates to Oregon from all points in the East are bearing good fruit. Corvallis has welcomed many strangers the past few weeks and still they come. It is well.
