An editorial paragraph in a recent number of the Spokane Review is as follows: "The breweries buy hops, and Oregon hop-growers, with one eye cocked on temperance and the other on the hop market, have set out to manufacture sentiment to prohibit the sale of ardent spirits, but not beer. But rye and corn make whiskey, and grapes and peaches go into brandy, and what is going to happen to the prohibition cause if every grower of every product that goes to feed Gambrinus, Bachus and John Barley-corn starts out to foster his own alcoholic market?"

The run on Royal Ann cherries was completed at the Corvallis cannery last Friday and for the present the plant is idle. About 500 cases of Royal Anns, 24 cans to the case, were put up and the verdict is that they are A. No. 1. The next work will be on the Royal Duke cherries, which are now ripe, after which no more fruit will be available until about the middle of August when the pears come on, and following these there will be a long run on tomatoes. A good run on pears is also promised. The season has certainly been a successful one and the product of the plant is such as to command the highest price in any and all markets.

There was a quiet funeral at the undertaking parlors of Bovee & Bauer at 2:45 Tuesday afternoon, over the remains of the late William Holcomb of Monroe. The services were conducted by Rev. C. T. Hurd in the presence of a few persons, and interment was at Crystal Lake cemetery. Mr. Holcomb met death by drowning in the Long Tom river at Monroe about 8 o'clock Sunday evening. With a companion, Joe Dovadsky, he went in bathing, although unable to swim. Just a moment before the fatal accident, Holcomb was warned by Dovadsky to be careful as there was a step-off in the river bed near by, where one was likely to step from solid earth off into 20 feet of water. "Oh, I'm not afraid, I've been here before" was Holcomb's reply, and almost instantly he stepped off into the hole and went down. Holcomb weighed about 195 pounds and Dovadsky only 125, but the latter swam to his friend's assistance and grabbed him. The drowning man, however, seized Dovadsky by the leg and only by kicking until he was free was Dovadsky able to save his own life. He hurried to the bank and got a pole with which to rescue Holcomb, but finding that impossible he ran to town for help and the river was dragged until midnight but not until early Monday morning was the body recovered. The remains were brought to Corvallis Monday and prepared for burial. Mr. Holcomb was about 27 years old and has only one relative here, his mother, who makes her home with Mrs. Millie Smith, in Linn county. A further touch of pathos is added to the melancholy event by the fact that both mother and son were without means and the latter was buried at the expense of the county.
