teach us. It was through a brief advertisement in an English newspaper that one of the most remarkable and peculiar of the domestic habits of English life was made public. Perhaps it is hardly ac-curate to say that it was made public for by that heroic resistence which mere butcher's arithmetic could foresee must cease at last. Lazareff and his successor, General Godolitsch, gratified the Czarina by a monthly bulletin of raids and massacres; and thereis something which seems inexpressibly revolting in their cynic admission of the superior strategy and valor of an enemy whom they hoped to subdue by starvation and ruse—that is, treachery, and the massacre of hostages and non-combatants.

The passes of Western Caucasus were defended by the Lesghians and Ossetes, who, in 1795, could still muster a force of 60,000 warriors in the Spartan sense of the first time, for the peculiar habit, or the first time, for the peculiar habit, or custom or question must have been long familiar to Englishmen living at home. Still, no one outside of England sus-pected its existence until the advertise-ment to which reference has been made appeared.

It seems that a young English lady re-cently left her home and disappeared totally from the knowledge of her parents. Being intelligent people, they, of course, did not employ a detective to find out the missing girl and to compound with her abductors for half her value, but they inserted an adver-30,000 warriors in the Spartan sense of the word; but with the return of every Spring a fresh swarm of Cossacks, Cal-mucks and Muscovite serfs fell upon that devoted band standing at bay like a wild animal against a pack of butcher dogs. The valleys were devastated, domestic animals were slain the auls, or mountain her value, but they inserted an advertisement in a daily paper, describing her appearance and offering a reasonable reward for her recovery. The peculiar feature of the advertisement was the fact that, after setting forth the height, weight, age, dress, and color of the eyes of the desired young lady, it mentioned that she was "tattooed on the left leg." From the way in which this assertion was made, it is clear that the fact of the tattooing was not regarded by the advervillages of Western Lesghia, were burned and their defenseless inhabitants butch-

The careful parent, in these circumstances, falls back upon tattooing, and in order not to disfigure his girls, he has them tattooed where the indelible mark is not, as a maintained their ground for more than twenty-four years. Mithridates, King of Pontus and Asyria, resisted the powers of Rome for even a longer period; but his resources were almost as vast as those of the Orbis Romanus, while the Circassian patriot, with never more than 20,000 tighting men, defied the legions of the Russian Empire, which were increased under Prince Baryantaski to ninety-five of Regiments, forty of artillery, 1600 polks of mounted Cossacks—together almost a third of a million. Frederic the Great, in the Seven Years' War, showed the same on such a date a girl marked "'S' in a diamond," was lost or mislaid in such a place, and she will soon be restored to him. Or suppose that the same Mr. Smith finds a girl in an omnibus whom he fancies belongs to him, but whom Mr. Brown rightfully insists is his private girl. There need be no dispute about the matter. Mr. Smith has only to say to Mr. Brown. "How are your girls marked?" Mr. Brown replies "J. B." with a star." An inspection of the disputed girl shows that Mr. Brown is right, and there is at once an end of the dispute. Thus, we see that tattooing a place, and she will soon be restored to scorn of compromise; but would he not have surrendered Brandenburg and Ber-lin as well as Silesis, if the four-fold nudispute. But it is quite possible that English girls are tattooed as a purely ornamental process. It should be noticed that the original advertisement which first called attention to the matter merely asserted that the missing girl was tattooed on the left leg. The pattern of the tattooing was not described, and we have no means of knowing its precise character.

The tendency of the cosmetic regulations is adverse to cruelty, and we may trust that the same by law of nature which prevents the hunter from digesting the flesh of a tortured animal will not permit the butchers of the Circassian patriots to utilize their victory. For alimentary purposes vivisection is an unprofitable business. economy, they are certainly deserving of praise.

The weight of probability is, however, in favor of the hypothesis that British girls are tattooed for identification, and not for ornament. Whether the custom will be introduced here remains to be seen—of course, by qualified and legitinate eyes. Probably it will gain ground slowly among us for the reason that girls are not so abundant here as in England, and the danger of losing them is, therefore, comparatively slight.

Estimated by their game qualities and Estimated by their game qualities and a difficulty sometimes experienced in fely landing them, the larger speciens of our mountain trout weigh like sturgeon. This fact is established thenever the trout, hooked in a pool of the sufficient depth and spread of ster, can bring to bear in his native lement the full resisting force of his emarkably strong and active tail. Illustrative of this, a story is told of the experience of two professional fishers whereoently went out from Helena to the Big Blackfoot, one a doctor and the other a lawyer. be open to serious objections. The careful parent, in these circumstances, falls back upon tattooing, and in order not to disfigure his girls, he has them tattooed where the indelible mark is not, as a rule, constantly forced upon the public gaze. The advantages of the custom are undeniable. Let us suppose that the girls of the Smith family, for example, are marked "S" in a diamond. Now, if old Mr. Smith, when taking his nine girls to Brighton, mislays one in the railway station, or forgets another and leaves her in a cab, he has merely to advertise that on such a date a girl marked "S" in a diamond. Five successive generations have been called upon to decide between death and a Muscovite citizenship, and the less horrible alternative. By a hundred years' war, and the sacrifice of a sillful artist in tattooing. Of course the colors employed would be only the light blue of the tattooing and they have deliberately chosen death as the less horrible alternative.
