

TARIFF BILL.

The monied aristocracy are in confusion and are having their energies taxed to the utmost to know how to maintain a high protective tariff and at the same time prevent the payment of the debt, and retain the national banking institutions. So long as they can manage to use the accumulation of money arising from the revenues by an extravagant and profligate administration, the banking institutions whose shareholders have been fattening off the labor of the country for more than twenty years, can rest in comparative security, but when money is allowed to accumulate in the treasury the people will at once clamor for the extinguishment of the debt and the lifting of the burden which the unjust and unnatural banking laws have endeavored to entail upon the coming generations.

The monied power, foreseeing the difficulty and fearing the murmur of discontent which was then spreading itself throughout the land, in consequence of the disproportion in price of the necessities of life and the price for labor required to purchase them, during the last session of Congress had a commission appointed to devise means of escape and at the same time promise the people relief and allay their discontent. Congress has met and the session is drawing to a close. The commission has made its report and the promised relief has not been granted nor is there any likelihood of its being realized during the present session. The following extract from the speech of Gen. Rosecrans will be found interesting in this connection:

During General Rosecrans' speech on the tariff, in the house, he said that freights from Europe to San Francisco have been as cheap as freights from New York. Articles of consumption which the Pacific slope people have had, were cheaper in the European market than in the east, yet when the national defense called for a tariff which deprived them of these advantages, they submitted without a murmur. They took their goods from inside our tariff line or exported them and paid the debts to the amount of $6,000,000 per annum, but our people regard the present tariff system as full of injustice and oppression. They think it is building great monopolies and special interests at the expense of the great mass of producers and consumers, which could only be justified by certain sudden and desperate national exigencies. They have the conviction that common justice and the interest of revenue for the last ten years have demanded thorough revision and great reduction of duties, and I share fully in the convictions of my constituents of the Pacific coast when I think that the present tariff should be thoroughly revised, simplified and reduced to the simplest rates of duties which will produce the revenue required for the economical administration and a reasonable protection to labor. Our people on the Pacific coast are especially anxious that this should be done. Any legislation looking honestly to this end will have my cordial support, and I shall be governed by the convictions I have here announced to my colleagues on the floor. Does the bill now before our committee answer the demands of our people? I answer that it does not.

The census—Gen. Walker has been employed by the government to complete the census. He contemplates the reduction of volume reports on special topics from 11,000 to 8,000 pages. Gen. Walker adds that all reports not already printed are in a fair state of progress. Acting Superintendent Seaton, the third chief clerk, is prostrated. One clerk is dead, another has gone south and a third lingers along in a most distressing disability of mind. Gen. Walker resumes the charge of the census and if granted necessary money, says he will bring the whole business to a close during the current calendar year. The expense of this census will be about nine and a half cents per head of population against nine cents in the ninth census appropriation; $300,000 will be enough to complete the work.

The Hawaiian Treaty.—A Wash. special says: It is understood that one modification of the Hawaiian treaty will be with reference to shipping, so as to assimilate Sandwich Island commerce to our coast. This, of course, will be accomplished by providing that trade between the countries shall be carried wholly in vessels bearing either the flag of the United States or that of the Hawaiian government. The object of this movement is to prevent British merchantmen from taking cargoes of merchandise from the east, unloading at the Sandwich Islands, and returning there with sugar, which they bring to San Francisco, where they are in a position to sail back again from whence they started.

STAR ROUTE TRIALS.

The star route trials still continue to attract public attention to the utter disgust of all sense of justice and decency. That our readers may have an insight of the disgusting spectacle and witness the degeneracy of our courts, we give the following extract of the proceedings contained in the dispatches of last Friday.

A. E. Boone was called in the star route trial. He had a conversation with Miner, Stephen Dorsey, and perhaps with John Dorsey. In the conversation with Stephen he recommended Moore. Miner called at witness' office next day and saw Moore. Moore insisted on a salary of $150 a month, which Miner agreed to allow. After Moore left the city he called Miner's attention to the fact that a check had not been sent to his wife according to promise. He also saw Stephen Dorsey, who promptly sent the check upon Moore's request. In connection with Stephen Dorsey, in November, 1877, Dorsey produced a letter from Peck, desiring him to secure an experienced man to get up bids for next letting. He offered witness the position, but the latter declined to accept a salary, demanding an interest in the business, which Dorsey finally agreed to give him.

Witness was asked who received the proposals when they were returned, but objection was made and another discussion followed. Bliss said Ingersoll was right in his statement that the government assumed that Stephen W. Dorsey was the root of the concern, —in fact he sent out the proposals and received them. The court allowed the question, and witness said: The packages were returned to him through Stephen W. Dorsey. Three postmasters responded,—the postmasters at Little Rock, Hot Springs and Helena, and the proposals were used in bidding at the letting, all that could get in, said the witness.

In response to a question for identification of the letter, Bliss read as follows: "U. S. Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C., Dec. 9, 1878."

"Are you sure it is the United States senate chamber?" said Ingersoll, with savage emphasis on the quoted words. Thus as the court rapped for order, "Oh, I only wanted that to be emphasized properly."

Merrick immediately presented another letter to witness, and inquired: "The Stephen W. Dorsey who signed that was United States senator, was he not?"

A.—"Yes, sir."

The letters were then offered in evidence as showing Dorsey's connection with the transactions to which witness testified. "In other words," Merrick said.

Witness on the stand was temporarily placed aside while S. W. Dorsey himself spoke to the jury on what he had written with his own hand.

The defense objected and pointed to the record of the last trial, when the court rejected the proffered evidence. In the course of argument Ingersoll used the expression, "Where will this end."

"In the penitentiary," promptly interrupted Bliss.

Ingersoll, shaking his finger at Bliss said, "You will be there as soon as my client."

The court—"This is entirely unprofessional."

Ingersoll—Did I provoke it? The court—No.

Ingersoll—I represent a gentleman and do not purpose doing anything a gentleman may not do.

The court said—At the last trial it seemed to have gone off with the idea that it was an attempt to prove some sort of official misconduct on the part of Dorsey, aside from the routes in this case. In that instance it overlooked entirely the other question, whether the evidence did not tend to show a connection between Dorsey and the defendants in the preparation of bids for a letting soon to be made. The court then ran off on that line. It might as well be understood the questions arising in this case would be decided without bias from any other decision. Suddenly and with great indignation, he said to Williams, who was smiling, what do you mean by that sir? What do you mean by sneering and giggling like a fool at the decisions of this court?

Williams—"I don't understand you. I don't believe the court's language is warranted. I was talking about another matter and did not hear you."

The court—"You should have been listening."

Williams—"Your honor had not decided the question yet, and could not have expressed any opinion upon it."

The court—"The court accepts your disclaimer and owes you an apology for the severity of its language."

The delivery of the opinion was resumed and resulted in the admission of the papers. Dorsey's letters to postmasters in Arkansas, which have been already published, request them to have the blank proposals certified and returned to him, taking care to let no one know from whom they came. Root & Keenan, mail contractors, and friends, were to be especially avoided. To Hon. Geo. Haycock, at Pine Bluff, Ark., he writes: "This is for an intimate friend of mine and I ask that you do it as a personal favor." Defense objected to a question put to witness, asking the reason for omitting from the blank proposals certain provisions contained in the blank forms of bids issued by the department. The question was finally ruled out and the court adjourned.
