

Tariff and Wool.

Recent years it has been a favorite policy with Republican politicians to create an impression or belief in the minds of the populace that the tariff is not to be considered as a party issue, but a mere local question, and at the same time make capital for themselves by individually promising a protection for some local industry. This was the course pursued by Congressman George in his recent canvass in Oregon; who in a stereotyped speech promised the farmers of this State to maintain a protection on wool that would keep out of competition the cheap wools of Australia and South America. That he went squarely back on that promise is evidenced by the present low price of wool, and the fact that a Republican Congress passed a tariff bill reducing the tariff on wool, and at the same time increasing the tariff on manufactured woolen goods. This bill catches the wool growers of Oregon both ways. It not only decreases the price of his wool but increases the price of woolen goods which he is required to buy. What he has to sell is cut down and what he has to buy is increased in price. This was done by a Republican Congress, and that, too, after the wool growers of Oregon had been promised a protection by Mr. George.

We are led to comment upon this matter from the fact that some of the Republican street politicians in and around Roseburg have been dishonestly representing to farmers that the decline in wool is caused by the Democratic policy of free trade. No statement could be further from the truth. The tariff upon wool never has been equal to what it would be under the Democratic policy. An honestly adjusted valorem duty for the purpose of revenue only, would amount to more than 25 per cent above the average tariff upon that commodity for the last twenty years; under a protective policy, as the figures will fully demonstrate. Upon an honestly adjusted tariff for revenue only, the wool growers of the country would, during the last twenty years, have received an annual protection of twenty-five per cent above what they have received by the Republican policy; amounting to five hundred per cent more protection than has been accorded to them. On the other hand they have been robbed in more than double that amount during the same period, by the dishonest policy of protection and compelled to pay an average of more than fifty per cent per annum on the manufactured articles which they consume over and above what it would have cost them under an honestly adjusted tariff for revenue only. A tariff for the purpose of revenue will afford a sufficient protection to any of our industries and a much greater benefit upon the agricultural interests of the country than that ruinous and dishonest policy of protection, which legislates the hard earnings out of the pockets of the producer and consumer into the coffers of the rich manufacturer and common carrier, whom it alone benefits at the expense of the whole people.

Twenty-five years ago more than seventy-five per cent of American commerce was carried in American vessels under American canvas, with the glorious Star Spangled Banner flying from the mast-head. With twenty years of a Republican protective policy less than sixteen per cent of our own products are carried in American ships as shown by the official statistics, while more than sixty-five per cent is carried in English vessels with the English Jack nailed to the mast-head. By this ruinous policy our people have been driven out of competition for the carrying of our own products, and our flag virtually from the high seas. A tax for any other purpose than revenue is dishonest, and ruinous to the laborer and consumer, and especially to the great agricultural interest in which the majority of our people are engaged.

The Old Ticket.

An immense amount of balderdash has been sent all over the United States by the Associated Press dispatches, to the effect that the democracy everywhere demands the nomination of Tilden and Hendricks as their candidates for President and Vice President at the next election. Should such be the result of the next convention, every democrat would cheer and they might be elected as they were in 1876; but up to this date we have seen no indication of any such demand. That the majority of the people of the United States felt deeply aggrieved that their will was disobeyed at that time there is no doubt, and had there not been a general conviction that it would have been obeyed but for the hesitation of Mr. Tilden and his friends, the nomination would have been repeated in 1880.

That this was not done at Cincinnati places their future nomination out of the question. "Tempora mutantur, etc." The times change and in the progressive rush to keep pace with the present, the dead past will be left to bury its own dead. There are too many live practical men in the democratic party who are able and strong enough to administer the government in accordance with the will of the people of to-day, to call up a ghost of the past for this purpose. There is Pendleton of Ohio, Mc Donald of Indiana, and a score of others who can easily carry our standard to victory, and from among these the chief will be selected, regardless of the preferences of our Republican fellow citizens.

"Outs" and "Ins."

A Western newspaper, surveying the situation, sadly admits that "the shortcomings of the Republicans may place the Democratic party in power. But," inquires the editor, in a discouraged tone, "what prospect is there for the country when it is considered absolutely necessary to call a party to power not because of its present professions, or past principles and methods, but solely because its opponent is no longer worthy of popular confidence?" For our part we can see a good "prospect for the country" if it will make proper use of political parties by employing one party as a constant menace to the other, a reminder that the "outs" will be "ins" when the dominant party "is no longer worthy of popular confidence." In fact, the only hope of the country lies in the probability that there will always be enough honest men who will desert their own party and go over to the opposition, when the good of their country imperatively demands such action, to insure a change in the Government.

The Oregonian in squirming under the mortgage tax law says: "Portland should not take the initiative for a special session of the legislature to repeal or modify the law. Let the call come from the rural counties, if they want it." This is extremely modest in Portland, considering the opposition the rural counties experienced from that quarter in passing the law. Is content to wait for the call to come from the rural counties, all will be well. The State will not be put to the expense of an extra session, and the money changers will have to pay their tax just the same as the rest of us, and that too in the counties where their money is loaned.
