Having divided humanity into two classes, we will now proceed to discuss the professional fool.

He gets around behind the barrel on the cellar stairs, so that if anything breaks he will get the benefit. Then he asks his wife to stand at the head of the stairs with a light, ostensibly so that he can see, but in reality so that he can show her what a young Hercules he is. The young Hercules and professional fool then carefully sets the chine of the barrel on his largest and most mellow toe. He swears softly to himself, and then gives the barrel a vicious jerk that jams his nose into the head of the barrel and skins the entire front of his legs. This maddens him so that he undertakes to throw the whole barrel over his head into the potato bin. This move is only partially successful, and when his wife and two of his neighbors roll the barrel from his remains at the foot of the stairs an awful sight meets their gaze. The young Hercules has his head in the plum jam and his feet mixed up with the pickled peaches. In his fall he has knocked off the faucet of the five-gallon coal oil can, and the oil is running into his ear. Most of the apples have rolled out of the barrel and are bathed in kerosene. Kerosene gives a rich aromatic flavor to fruit, that cannot be successfully Upward of twenty years ago I had a imitated. Sometimes in letting a barrel of apples down stairs the stair breaks and lets the man down also. But that makes like the remarks of the baby elephant when the trick mule kicked him just below the thorax, and about due south of the liver pad.
